Today's Presidential Action:

- Today at the National Summit on Fatherhood the President will announce significant funding increases for initiatives to help promote responsible fatherhood. The President will also call on Congress to pass bipartisan fatherhood legislation this year.

Background on the President's Fatherhood Initiative:

- The National Summit on Fatherhood was organized by the National Fatherhood Initiative, a non-partisan, non-sectarian civic initiative that promotes the goal of increasing the number of children who grow up with involved, committed and responsible fathers. The Summit was also supported by bipartisan Congressional, Senatorial, Gubernatorial and Mayoral task forces on fatherhood promotion.

- President Bush has had a long commitment to this issue. As Governor of Texas, he helped to launch the Texas Fatherhood Initiative – a statewide public awareness campaign to promote responsible fatherhood, coupled with strong grassroots and community leadership.

- Approximately 28% of America's children are living without a father in their home. More than a third live apart from their biological fathers. Forty percent of children in fatherless homes have not seen their fathers in more than a year. Millions of children live with fathers who are not actively involved in their lives. Children who live without active fathers are more likely to suffer from poverty, poor health, and emotional and psychological problems. These children are also more likely to have lower educational achievement, be victims of child abuse and engage in criminal behavior.

- President Bush's budget provides $64 million in FY02 as part of a five-year, $315 million effort to promote responsible fatherhood. This initiative will provide competitive grants to faith- and community-based organizations that promote successful parenting and strengthen marriage. It will also help unemployed or low-income fathers and their families to stay off welfare through job training and mentoring programs.

- The President's budget also increases funding for the Promoting Safe and Stable Families Program by $200 million to $505 million in FY02. States often do not have enough money to provide services that could either keep children with their families or support family reunification where it is appropriate. These funds will be used to help states keep children with their biological families whenever it is safe and appropriate, as well as to place children with adoptive families.

    - ✓ This new funding includes $67 million to support children whose parents have been incarcerated. This program, Mentoring Children of Prisoners, will help maintain parent-child connections during a parent's imprisonment and will aid in reunification after imprisonment. It is designed to work with successful model programs like Big Brothers-Big Sisters of America.

- President Bush has also taken a leadership role in promoting adoption. The tax relief bill that the President will sign permanently extends and increases the adoption tax credit from $5,000 per child to $10,000 per child for qualified adoption expenses. Hopefully, this will also encourage adoption of the more than 117,000 children in foster care who wait for a "forever family."

  - ✓ For special needs adoptions, it increases the credit from $6,000, for qualified adoption expenses, to $10,000, regardless of expenses. Parents who adopt children with special needs will benefit from this meaningful tax credit because it will help cover the unique adoption costs.

- The President calls on Congress to pass bipartisan fatherhood legislation this year. The President supports legislation that would:

  - ✓ Improve parenting skills through skills-based education, mentoring, disseminating information about good parenting practices, and related activities; and
  - ✓ Strengthen marriage through skills-based marriage education, mentoring, and related activities.

Today's Presidential Action:

- Today at the National Summit on Fatherhood the President will announce significant funding increases for initiatives to help promote responsible fatherhood. The President will also call on Congress to pass bipartisan fatherhood legislation this year.

Background on the President's Fatherhood Initiative:

- The National Summit on Fatherhood was organized by the National Fatherhood Initiative, a non-partisan, non-sectarian civic initiative that promotes the goal of increasing the number of children who grow up with involved, committed and responsible fathers. The Summit was also supported by bipartisan Congressional, Senatorial, Gubernatorial and Mayoral task forces on fatherhood promotion.

- President Bush has had a long commitment to this issue. As Governor of Texas, he helped to launch the Texas Fatherhood Initiative – a statewide public awareness campaign to promote responsible fatherhood, coupled with strong grassroots and community leadership.

- Approximately 28% of America's children are living without a father in their home. More than a third live apart from their biological fathers. Forty percent of children in fatherless homes have not seen their fathers in more than a year. Millions of children live with fathers who are not actively involved in their lives. Children who live without active fathers are more likely to suffer from poverty, poor health, and emotional and psychological problems. These children are also more likely to have lower educational achievement, be victims of child abuse and engage in criminal behavior.

- President Bush's budget provides $64 million in FY02 as part of a five-year, $315 million effort to promote responsible fatherhood. This initiative will provide competitive grants to faith- and community-based organizations that promote successful parenting and strengthen marriage. It will also help unemployed or low-income fathers and their families to stay off welfare through job training and mentoring programs.

- The President's budget also increases funding for the Promoting Safe and Stable Families Program by $200 million to $505 million in FY02. States often do not have enough money to provide services that could either keep children with their families or support family reunification where it is appropriate. These funds will be used to help states keep children with their biological families whenever it is safe and appropriate, as well as to place children with adoptive families.

    - ✓ This new funding includes $67 million to support children whose parents have been incarcerated. This program, Mentoring Children of Prisoners, will help maintain parent-child connections during a parent's imprisonment and will aid in reunification after imprisonment. It is designed to work with successful model programs like Big Brothers-Big Sisters of America.

- President Bush has also taken a leadership role in promoting adoption. The tax relief bill that the President will sign permanently extends and increases the adoption tax credit from $5,000 per child to $10,000 per child for qualified adoption expenses. Hopefully, this will also encourage adoption of the more than 117,000 children in foster care who wait for a "forever family."

  - ✓ For special needs adoptions, it increases the credit from $6,000, for qualified adoption expenses, to $10,000, regardless of expenses. Parents who adopt children with special needs will benefit from this meaningful tax credit because it will help cover the unique adoption costs.

- The President calls on Congress to pass bipartisan fatherhood legislation this year. The President supports legislation that would:

  - ✓ Improve parenting skills through skills-based education, mentoring, disseminating information about good parenting practices, and related activities; and

Tax Relief Becomes the Law of the Land

- President Bush fulfilled a key promise today by signing fair and responsible tax relief into law.

- The President promised to change the tone in Washington and focus on results. He has done both, and the new bipartisan consensus on tax relief should serve as the model for future bipartisan accomplishments. This shared success is only the beginning.

- Across-the-board tax relief does not often happen in Washington. In fact, since World War II, it has happened only twice -- President Kennedy's tax cut in the 1960s and President Reagan's in the 1980s.

- A year ago, tax relief was said to be a political impossibility. Six months ago, it was supposed to be a political liability. Today, it became reality.

- For the last decade the American people have seen government take an increasing share of their personal income. Today, and for the next 10 years, because Democrats and Republicans are working together, help is on the way.

- Americans have overpaid their government – and they're about to get a refund.

- This is a victory for the American people, and the credit belongs to all who helped make it happen – Democrats and Republicans alike.

- The new law provides an immediate jump-start to our economy, puts money back in people's pockets this year when they need it most, and gives every American who pays taxes a tax cut.

- Americans will get refund checks beginning in July and their tax bills will continue to go down for the next 10 years. This fall single taxpayers will get a $300 refund check, single parents will receive a $500 refund check, and married taxpayers will get a $600 refund check.

- The bipartisan agreement contains every major element of the President's tax relief plan. This agreement represents the largest tax cut in 20 years.

  - ✓ Cuts taxes for all taxpayers in all tax rates.
  - ✓ Repeals the death tax.
  - ✓ Provides relief from the marriage penalty.
  - ✓ Doubles the child tax credit to $1,000 to help parents with the high costs of raising children.

For more information please contact White House Communications at (202) 456-2777

- Only 125 days into his Administration, the President and Congress achieved together what just a few months ago seemed impossible. They said it couldn't be done. But President Bush knew it could be done if Republicans and Democrats would work together.

- Other key provisions:

  - ✓ Expands the earned income credit and makes the child credit refundable to put money in the hands of millions of families with children.
  - ✓ Helps Americans save more for their retirement tax-free by raising IRA contribution limits.
  - ✓ Simplifies our tax code.
  - ✓ Cuts taxes on small businessmen and women.
  - ✓ Cuts taxes to help families save for their children's education.

- The President thanks both Democrats and Republicans in Congress for working with him in good faith to help send the American people a refund – so that they can have more of their hard-earned dollars to save, invest and build as they choose.

Attached are talking points on today's historic bill signing.
Congratulations to everyone who made it possible, especially the Legislative Affairs team and the NEC tax cut gurus.

Tax Relief Becomes the Law of the Land

- President Bush fulfilled a key promise today by signing fair and responsible tax relief into law.

- The President promised to change the tone in Washington and focus on results. He has done both, and the new bipartisan consensus on tax relief should serve as the model for future bipartisan accomplishments. This shared success is only the beginning.

- Across-the-board tax relief does not often happen in Washington. In fact, since World War II, it has happened only twice -- President Kennedy's tax cut in the 1960s and President Reagan's in the 1980s.

- A year ago, tax relief was said to be a political impossibility. Six months ago, it was supposed to be a political liability. Today, it became reality.

- For the last decade the American people have seen government take an increasing share of their personal income. Today, and for the next 10 years, because Democrats and Republicans are working together, help is on the way.

- Americans have overpaid their government – and they're about to get a refund.

- This is a victory for the American people, and the credit belongs to all who helped make it happen – Democrats and Republicans alike.

- The new law provides an immediate jump-start to our economy, puts money back in people's pockets this year when they need it most, and gives every American who pays taxes a tax cut.

- Americans will get refund checks beginning in July and their tax bills will continue to go down for the next 10 years. This fall single taxpayers will get a $300 refund check, single parents will receive a $500 refund check, and married taxpayers will get a $600 refund check.

- The bipartisan agreement contains every major element of the President's tax relief plan. This agreement represents the largest tax cut in 20 years.

  - ✓ Cuts taxes for all taxpayers in all tax rates.
  - ✓ Repeals the death tax.
  - ✓ Provides relief from the marriage penalty.
  - ✓ Doubles the child tax credit to $1,000 to help parents with the high costs of raising children.

For more information please contact White House Communications at (202) 456-2777

- Only 125 days into his Administration, the President and Congress achieved together what just a few months ago seemed impossible. They said it couldn't be done. But President Bush knew it could be done if Republicans and Democrats would work together.

- Other key provisions:

  - ✓ Expands the earned income credit and makes the child credit refundable to put money in the hands of millions of families with children.
  - ✓ Helps Americans save more for their retirement tax-free by raising IRA contribution limits.
  - ✓ Simplifies our tax code.
  - ✓ Cuts taxes on small businessmen and women.
  - ✓ Cuts taxes to help families save for their children's education.

- The President thanks both Democrats and Republicans in Congress for working with him in good faith to help send the American people a refund – so that they can have more of their hard-earned dollars to save, invest and build as they choose.

Any chance to help these guys get this reception? The College Republicans were always short changed under Bush 41 and Reagan (though we did get to run his birthday party). Can you guide me as to how to work this through the system? Thanks Susan.

<<presandveepinvite.doc>> Dear Jack,

Once again, I really appreciate your willingness to help. You have not forgotten where you came from and it certainly matters to the CRs.
We are looking for a reception in the White House or on the grounds of some kind from 5-7 pm on Friday June 29, 2001 for approximately 100 CR activists.

The group would consist of all state chairmen, present and future national officers and a few guests. I need not tell you the impact that such a gesture would have on these people. They would wed the College Republicans to the president in an unprecedented way.

I am forwarding on to you the letters requesting that the President and the Vice President speak to the convention. The Vice President said no and the President has yet to respond. Karl Rove and is speaking during the day. We have not requested any such reception through any official channels yet. Hopefully, you can guide us in the right direction for that and possibly put in a good word. I will ask Ralph Reed for the same.

I look forward to seeing you at the convention at the end of the month.

Scientists' Report Doesn't
Support the Kyoto Treaty
By Richard S. Lindzen. Mr. Lindzen, a professor of meteorology at MIT, was a member of the National Academy of Sciences panel on climate change.

Last week the National Academy of Sciences released a report on climate change, prepared in response to a request from the White House, that was depicted in the press as an implicit endorsement of the Kyoto Protocol. CNN's Michelle Mitchell was typical of the coverage when she declared that the report represented "a unanimous decision that global warming is real, is getting worse, and is due to man. There is no wiggle room."

As one of 11 scientists who prepared the report, I can state that this is simply untrue. For starters, the NAS never asks that all participants agree to all elements of a report, but rather that the report represent the span of views. This the full report did, making clear that there is no consensus, unanimous or otherwise, about long-term climate trends and what causes them.

As usual, far too much public attention was paid to the hastily prepared summary rather than to the body of the report. The summary began with a zinger -- that greenhouse gases are accumulating in Earth's atmosphere as a result of human activities, causing surface air temperatures and subsurface ocean temperatures to rise, etc., before following with the necessary qualifications. For example, the full text noted that 20 years was too short a period for estimating long-term trends, but the summary forgot to mention this.

Our primary conclusion was that despite some knowledge and agreement, the science is by no means settled. We are quite confident (1) that global mean temperature is about 0.5 degrees Celsius higher than it was a century ago; (2) that atmospheric levels of carbon dioxide have risen over the past two centuries; and (3) that carbon dioxide is a greenhouse gas whose increase is likely to warm the earth (one of many, the most important being water vapor and clouds).

But -- and I cannot stress this enough -- we are not in a position to confidently attribute past climate change to carbon dioxide or to forecast what the climate will be in the future. That is to say, contrary to media impressions, agreement with the three basic statements tells us almost nothing relevant to policy discussions.

One reason for this uncertainty is that, as the report states, the climate is always changing; change is the norm. Two centuries ago, much of the Northern Hemisphere was emerging from a little ice age. A millennium ago, during the Middle Ages, the same region was in a warm period. Thirty years ago, we were concerned with global cooling.

Distinguishing the small recent changes in global mean temperature from the natural variability, which is unknown, is not a trivial task. All attempts so far make the assumption that existing computer climate models simulate natural variability, but I doubt that anyone really believes this assumption.

We simply do not know what relation, if any, exists between global climate changes and water vapor, clouds, storms, hurricanes, and other factors, including regional climate changes, which are generally much larger than global changes and not correlated with them. Nor do we know how to predict changes in greenhouse gases. This is because we cannot forecast economic and technological change over the next century, and also because there are many man-made substances whose properties and levels are not well known, but which could be comparable in importance to carbon dioxide.

What we do is know that a doubling of carbon dioxide by itself would produce only a modest temperature increase of one degree Celsius. Larger projected increases depend on "amplification" of the carbon dioxide by more important, but poorly modeled, greenhouse gases, clouds and water vapor.

The press has frequently tied the existence of climate change to a need for Kyoto. The NAS panel did not address this question. My own view, consistent with the panel's work, is that the Kyoto Protocol would not result in a substantial reduction in global warming. Given the difficulties in significantly limiting levels of atmospheric carbon dioxide, a more effective policy might well focus on other greenhouse substances whose potential for reducing global warming in a short time may be greater.

The panel was finally asked to evaluate the work of the United Nations' Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, focusing on the Summary for Policymakers, the only part ever read or quoted. The Summary for Policymakers, which is seen as endorsing Kyoto, is commonly presented as the consensus of thousands of the world's foremost climate scientists.

Within the confines of professional courtesy, the NAS panel essentially concluded that the IPCC's Summary for Policymakers does not provide suitable guidance for the U.S. government.

The full IPCC report is an admirable description of research activities in climate science, but it is not specifically directed at policy. The Summary for Policymakers is, but it is also a very different document. It represents a consensus of government representatives (many of whom are also their nations' Kyoto representatives), rather than of scientists. The resulting document has a strong tendency to disguise uncertainty, and conjures up some scary scenarios for which there is no evidence.

Science, in the public arena, is commonly used as a source of authority with which to bludgeon political opponents and propagandize uninformed citizens. This is what has been done with both the reports of the IPCC and the NAS. It is a reprehensible practice that corrodes our ability to make rational decisions. A fairer view of the science will show that there is still a vast amount of uncertainty -- far more than advocates of Kyoto would like to acknowledge -- and that the NAS report has hardly ended the debate. Nor was it meant to.

Introduction

Three months ago, the President directed a Cabinet-level review of U.S. climate change policy. Members of the Cabinet, the Vice President, and senior White House staff have been meeting to examine the science, technologies, current U.S. efforts, and a wide range of innovative options for addressing concentrations of greenhouse gases in the atmosphere.

During that time, the Cabinet-level climate change working group has held regular and intensive sessions and has heard from many experts representing a wide range of views. To obtain the most recent information and a balanced view of what we know and do not know about the science of climate change, the working group requested a report from the National Academy of Sciences. The report outlines areas supported by the science and significant gaps in our knowledge of climate change.

The following material contains the initial findings of the working group: summaries of current U.S. actions, an analysis of the Kyoto Protocol, and proposals to advance the science, advance technologies, and create partnerships in the Western Hemisphere and throughout the world to address climate change.

The President has directed the Cabinet-level climate change working group to press forward and develop innovative approaches in accordance with several basic principles. These approaches should: (1) be consistent with the long-term goal of stabilizing greenhouse gas concentrations in the atmosphere; (2) be measured, as we learn more from science and build on it; (3) be flexible to adjust to new information and take advantage of new technology; (4) ensure continued economic growth and prosperity; (5) pursue market-based incentives and spur technological innovation; and (6) be based on global participation, including developing countries.

The Cabinet-level climate change working group will continue its review consistent with these principles.

CURRENT U.S. ACTIONS TO ADDRESS CLIMATE CHANGE

"The earth's well-being is also an issue important to America – and it's an issue that should be important to every nation and in every part of the world. My Administration is committed to a leadership role on the issue of climate change. We recognize our responsibility and we will meet it, at home, in our hemisphere, and in the world."

--President George W. Bush

Executive Summary

The United States government is currently pursuing a broad range of strategies to reduce emissions of greenhouse gases in the major greenhouse gas emitting sectors of our economy:

- Electricity -- Federal programs promote greenhouse gas reductions through the development of cleaner, more efficient technologies for electricity generation and transmission. The government is also supporting the development of renewable resources, such as solar energy, wind power, geothermal energy, hydropower, bio-energy, and hydrogen.
- Transportation -- The United States is currently promoting the development of fuel-efficient motor vehicles and trucks, researching options for producing cleaner fuels, and implementing programs to reduce the number of vehicle miles traveled.
- Industry -- The United States is implementing many partnership programs with industry to reduce emissions of carbon dioxide (CO_2) and other greenhouse gases, to promote source reduction and recycling, and to increase the use of combined heat and power.
- Buildings -- Federal voluntary partnership programs promote energy efficiency in the nation's commercial, residential, and government buildings (including schools) by offering technical assistance as well as the labeling of efficient products, efficient new homes, and efficient office buildings.
- Agriculture and Forestry -- The Federal government is implementing conservation programs that have the benefit of sequestering carbon in soils and off-setting agricultural emissions of greenhouse gases.
- The Federal Government – The Federal Government has taken steps to reduce greenhouse gas emissions from energy use in Federal buildings and in the Federal transportation fleet.
- The National Energy Policy – The National Energy Policy includes new recommendations to promote energy efficiency, conservation, increased use of natural gas and renewable energy, and the new construction of nuclear capacity.

United States government climate change programs are achieving real results, helping to reduce greenhouse gas emissions by 66 million metric tons of carbon equivalent in 2000. United States carbon intensity – the amount of CO2 emitted per unit of GDP – declined 15% from 1990 to 1999.

In addition, businesses, state and local governments, and non-governmental organizations are addressing global climate change – by improving the measurement and reporting of greenhouse gas emission reductions; through voluntary reductions, including emissions trading; and actions to sequester carbon through tree planting and forest preservation, restoration and management.

The Federal Government

The U.S. government is currently pursuing a broad range of strategies to reduce emissions of greenhouse gases, including:

- Voluntary public-private partnership programs that promote energy efficiency and the broader use of renewable energy;
- Research and development (R&D) investments and tax incentives to increase energy efficiency and the broader use of renewable energy;
- Appliance standards that increase the minimum level of efficiency of products on the market;
- Financial incentives such as grants to states and localities; and
- Programs to reduce greenhouse gas emissions from Federal buildings and transportation fleets.

These programs are achieving real reductions in greenhouse gas emissions – the U.S. government estimates that its existing climate change programs reduced emissions by 66 million metric tons of carbon equivalent (MMTCE) in 2000[1], approximately 2.7% of total emissions. The amount of CO2 emitted per unit of GDP declined 15% from 1990 to 1999.[2]

The following sections highlight illustrative programs in the major greenhouse gas emitting sectors of the economy: the electric power industry (32% of total U.S. greenhouse gas emissions); transportation (27%); other industry (21%); residential and commercial buildings (13%); and agriculture and forestry (net 7%) (unlike other sectors of the economy, agricultural and forestry activities can actively remove carbon dioxide from the atmosphere).[3]

Electricity

Federal programs promote greenhouse gas reductions through the development of cleaner, more efficient technologies for electricity generation and transmission. For example, the Environmental Protection Agency/Department of Energy Combined Heat and Power Challenge program has the goal of doubling U.S. combined heat and power capacity by 2010 by providing technical assistance and addressing regulatory issues where possible.

The Federal government is also supporting renewable resources such as solar energy, wind power, geothermal energy, hydropower, bio-energy, and hydrogen. For example, the Department of Energy supports the development of a wide range of solar and renewable energy technology, seeking to improve their reliability, expand their applicability, and reduce their costs. These activities have been very successful in bringing down technology costs. The cost of producing photo-voltaic modules has decreased 50 percent since 1991, and the cost of wind power has decreased 85 percent since 1980. Commercial success has been achieved for both of these areas in certain applications.

Transportation

The U.S. is currently promoting the development of fuel-efficient motor vehicles and trucks, researching options for producing cleaner fuels, and implementing programs to reduce the number of vehicle miles traveled. For example, through the Partnership for a New Generation of Vehicles (PNGV) program, the research has directly led to the commercial introduction of new hybrid vehicles and soon hydrogen as well. Commercialization of such vehicles could cut fuel use and carbon emissions for individual vehicles significantly and could lay the foundation for large, long-term fuel and carbon benefits. If 10% of the on-road vehicle fleet utilized PNGV technologies, the aggregate emission reductions could be approximately 20 million metric tons of carbon equivalent per year. The program is being extended to sport utility vehicles and other light trucks which, because of their lower baseline fuel economies, have the potential for even greater overall fuel and carbon savings per vehicle.

Industry

The U.S. government is implementing many partnership programs with industry to reduce emissions of carbon dioxide (CO_2) and other greenhouse gases, to promote source reduction and recycling, and to increase the use of combined heat and power. For example, current voluntary partnerships directed toward eliminating market barriers to the profitable collection and use of methane that otherwise would be released to the atmosphere are expected to hold methane emissions at or below 1990 levels through 2010. Since the launch of EPA's Voluntary Aluminum Industrial Partnership in 1995, the program's membership has grown to include 22 of the nation's 23 aluminum smelters, representing 94% of U.S. production capacity. As of 2000, program partners cumulatively achieved a 45% reduction in perfluorocarbon (a high global warming potential gas) emissions from 1990 levels.[4]

Commercial and Residential Buildings

Partnership programs promote energy efficiency in the nation's commercial, residential, and government buildings (including schools) by offering technical assistance as well as the labeling of efficient products, efficient new homes, and efficient office buildings. As one example, the

[4] The Power of Partnerships: Energy Star and Other Voluntary Programs, 2000 Annual Report of the Climate Protection Partnerships Division, U.S. EPA, Summer 2001.

EPA/DOE Energy Star program collaborates with a wide range of building owners and users -- retailers, real estate investors, small businesses, governments and schools. Each partner commits to improve the energy performance of its facilities and the most efficient buildings are awarded the Energy Star label. More than 16% of the U.S. commercial, public, and industrial building market is enrolled in Energy Star. Nationwide, Energy Star has eliminated the need for over 10,000 megawatts of peak generating capacity – equivalent to 20 large (50 MW) power plants.[5]

Agriculture and Forestry

The Federal government is conducting research into methods to reduce emissions of methane and nitrous oxide from agriculture, and is implementing conservation programs that have the benefit of sequestering carbon in soils and forests. For example, USDA's Conservation Reserve Program (CRP) has taken over 36 million acres of environmentally sensitive crop land out of production. CRP provides long-term environmental benefits, including the offset of up to 12 MMTCE each year.[6]

The Federal Government

The Federal Government has taken steps to reduce greenhouse gas emissions from energy use in Federal buildings and in the Federal transportation fleet by:

- Requiring all Federal agencies to take steps to cut greenhouse gas emissions from energy use in buildings by 30% below 1990 levels by 2010.
- Directing Federal agencies in Washington, D.C. to offer to their employees up to $65 per month in transit and van pool benefits.
- Requiring Federal agencies to implement strategies to reduce their fleet's annual petroleum consumption by 20% relative to 1999 consumption levels and to use alternative fuels a majority of the time.

Businesses, States and Communities, and Non-Governmental Organizations

Businesses, states and local governments, and non-governmental organizations are also moving forward to address global climate change -- through programs to improve the measurement and reporting of emission reductions; through voluntary programs, including emissions trading programs; and through sequestration programs. For example:

- Under the Voluntary Reporting of Greenhouse Gases program, provided by Section 1605(b) of the Energy Policy Act of 1992, more than 200 companies voluntarily reported to the Department of Energy their voluntary measures to reduce, avoid or sequester greenhouse gas emissions, principally carbon dioxide.[7] These companies undertook 1,715 projects and achieved greenhouse gas emission reductions and carbon sequestration equivalent to 61.5 MMTCE, or about 3.4 percent of 1999 total U.S. greenhouse gas emissions.[8]

- Electric Utilities: Several companies have committed to reducing greenhouse gas emissions. Measures include:

  - ✓ Improved generation efficiency (seasonal use of natural gas, hydroelectric turbine replacements, expanded capacity, shortened outage schedules at nuclear plants);
  - ✓ Improved pipeline, transmission and distribution equipment efficiencies (including reducing leaks);
  - ✓ Increased use of renewables (wind, biomass and solar);
  - ✓ Improved home and office energy efficiencies (low-income weatherization, home energy audits, inefficient refrigerator and freezer removal and recycling, installation of advanced energy management systems, planting trees, and retrofitting energy efficient lighting in company buildings); and
  - ✓ Investments in more efficient technologies (programs to install geothermal heat pumps, commercialize emerging energy efficient and renewable energy technologies, accelerate introduction of electric vehicles into the marketplace, and enhance carbon sequestration).

- Oil and Gas: Some oil and gas companies have added greenhouse gas reductions to their list of corporate priorities. One company intends to reduce its greenhouse gases by 10% by 2002 (over 1990 levels), and another company is seeking to reduce by 10% by 2010. To do this, the company is adopting an internal system of company-wide emissions trading to meet its goal in the most cost-effective way possible. Significant gains can be made from such measures as reducing flaring and leaking.

- Auto Manufacturers: Auto manufacturers have announced production plans for hybrid gas and electric vehicles in 2003 or 2004 and have pledged to increase their sport utility vehicles' fuel economy by 25% by 2005.

- Chemicals: A chemicals trade association supports voluntary programs and its members' actions to improve energy efficiency and reduce greenhouse gases. For example, one company says it will reduce its greenhouse gas emissions by 65% (by 2010, over 1990 levels). It already has cut its global emissions by 45% by making major process-change investments (reducing nitrous oxides), by holding energy consumption flat even with tremendous production growth (with powerhouse and process efficiencies), and increased use of renewable energy. Another company is working to reduce energy use by 20% per unit of production by 2005.

- Non-Governmental Organizations. Several non-governmental organizations and coalitions have initiated partnership programs with large global corporations to reduce emissions of greenhouse gases, and promote the use of energy conservation, renewable energy sources, and efficient technologies. Non-governmental organizations also are working with companies to support forestry projects that sequester carbon through tree planting and forest preservation, restoration and management.

[8] DOE/EIA-0608 (1999), Annual Report of the Voluntary Reporting of Greenhouse Gases, February 12, 2001.

- States. More than 25 states have initiated state-based action plans to reduce greenhouse gas emissions. Some states are using market-based mechanisms to achieve reductions. For example, the State of New Jersey has established a 3.5% statewide reduction goal and is developing voluntary agreements with various businesses.

The National Energy Policy

The National Energy Policy includes numerous recommendations to promote energy efficiency and conservation and to reduce emissions of greenhouse gases through the use of alternative, renewable, and cleaner forms of energy.[9] These recommendations include:

Efficiency and Conservation Measures

- Tax incentives and other initiatives to promote the use of combined heat and power.

  The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of the Treasury to work with Congress to encourage increased energy efficiency through combined heat and power (CHP) projects by shortening the depreciation life for CHP projects or providing an investment tax credit.

  The NEPD Group also recommended that the President direct the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) to work with local and state governments to promote the use of well-designed CHP and other clean power generation at brownfields sites, consistent with the local communities' interests. EPA will also work to clarify liability issues if they are raised at a particular site.

  The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the EPA Administrator to promote CHP through flexibility in environmental permitting.

- Reviewing and providing recommendations on establishing CAFE standards as well as other market-based approaches to increase the national average fuel economy of new motor vehicles.

  The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of Transportation to:

  - ✓ Review and provide recommendations on establishing Corporate Average Fuel Economy (CAFE) standards with due consideration of the National Academy of Sciences study to be released in July 2001. Responsibly crafted CAFE standards should increase efficiency without negatively impacting the U.S. automotive industry. The determination of future fuel economy standards must therefore be addressed analytically and based on sound science.

[9] National Energy Policy: Report of the National Energy Policy Development Group, May 2001.

- ✓ Consider passenger safety, economic concerns, and disparate impact on the U.S. versus foreign fleets of automobiles.
- ✓ Look at other market-based approaches to increasing the national average fuel economy of new motor vehicles.

➢ Directing all agencies to use technological advances to better protect our environment.

The Administration remains committed to investing in Intelligent Transportation Systems (ITS) and encourages the private sector to invest in ITS applications. This Department of Transportation (DOT) program funds the development of improved transportation infrastructure that will reduce congestion, such as traveler information/navigation systems, freeway management, and electronic toll collection. ITS applications reduce fuel associated with travel.

The Administration remains committed to the DOT's fuel-cell-powered transit bus program, authored by the Transportation Equity Act for the 21st Century (TEA-21). This program demonstrates the viability of fuel-cell power plants for transit bus applications.

The Administration remains committed to the Clean Buses program. TEA-21 establishes a new clean fuel formula grant program, which provides an opportunity to accelerate the introduction of advanced bus propulsion technologies into the mainstream of the nation's transit fleet.

➢ Promoting energy efficiency, including expanding the Energy Star program.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of Energy to conduct a review of current funding and historic performance of energy efficiency research and development programs in light of the recommendations of this report. In addition, the NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Office of Science and Technology Policy and the President's Council of Advisors on Science and Technology to review and make recommendations on using the nation's energy resources more efficiently.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of Energy to promote greater energy efficiency:

- ✓ Expand the Energy Star program beyond office buildings to include schools, retail buildings, health care facilities, and homes.
- ✓ Extend the Energy Star labeling program to additional products, appliances, and services.
- ✓ Strengthen Department of Energy public education programs relating to energy efficiency.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the EPA Administrator to develop and implement a strategy to increase public awareness of the sizable savings that energy efficiency offers to homeowners across the country.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of Energy to establish a national priority for improving energy efficiency. The priority would be to improve the energy intensity of the U.S. economy as measured by the amount of energy required for each dollar of economic productivity. This increased efficiency should be pursued through the combined efforts of industry, consumers, and federal, state, and local governments.

- Conserving energy at federal facilities.

  The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct heads of executive departments and agencies to take appropriate actions to conserve energy use at their facilities to the maximum extent consistent with the effective discharge of public responsibilities.

- Improving and expanding appliance standards.

  The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of Energy to improve the energy efficiency of appliances:

  - ✓ Support the appliance standards program for covered products, setting higher standards where technologically feasible and economically justified.
  - ✓ Expand the scope of the appliance standards program, setting standards for additional appliances where technologically feasible and economically justified.

- Promoting congestion mitigation technologies.

  The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of Transportation to review and promote congestion mitigation technologies and strategies and work with Congress on legislation to implement these strategies.

- Reducing demand for transportation fuels by establishing a ground freight management program.

  The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the EPA and DOT to develop ways to reduce demand for petroleum transportation fuels. These agencies will work with the trucking industry to establish a program to reduce emissions and fuel consumption from long-haul trucks at truck stops by implementing alternatives to idling, such as electrification and auxiliary power units at truck stops along interstate highways. EPA and DOT will develop partnership agreements with trucking fleets, truck stops, and manufacturers of idle-reducing technologies (e.g., portable auxiliary packs, electrification) to install and use low-emission-idling technologies.

Alternative, Renewable, and Clean Forms of Energy

- Increasing America's use of renewable and alternative energy

  The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretaries of the Interior and Energy to re-evaluate access limitations to federal lands in order to increase renewable energy production, such as biomass, wind, geothermal, and solar.

The NEPD Group supported the increase of $39.2 million in the FY 2002 budget amendment for the Department of Energy's Energy Supply account that would provide increased support for research and development of renewable energy resources.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of Energy to conduct a review of current funding and historic performance of renewable energy and alternative energy research and development programs. Based on this review, the Secretary of Energy is then directed to propose appropriate funding of those research and development programs that are performance-based and are modeled as public-private partnerships.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of the Treasury to work with Congress to develop legislation to provide for a temporary income tax credit available for the purchase of new hybrid or fuel-cell vehicles between 2002 and 2007.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of the Treasury to work with Congress on legislation to expand the section 29 tax credit to make it available for new landfill methane projects. The credit could be tiered, depending on whether a landfill is already required by federal law to collect and flare its methane emissions due to local air pollution concerns.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of the Interior to determine ways to reduce the delays in geothermal lease processing as part of the permitting review process.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of the Treasury to work with Congress on legislation to extend and expand tax credits for electricity produced using wind and biomass. The President's budget request extends the present 1.7 cents per kilowatt hour tax credit for electricity produced from wind and biomass; expands eligible biomass sources to include forest-related sources, agricultural sources, and certain urban sources; and allows a credit for electricity produced from biomass co-fired with coal.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of the Treasury to work with Congress on legislation to provide a new 15 percent tax credit for residential solar energy property, up to a maximum credit of $2,000.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of the Treasury to work with Congress to continue the ethanol excise tax exemption.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of Energy to develop next-generation technology—including hydrogen and fusion:

- ✓ Develop an education campaign that communicates the benefits of alternative forms of energy, including hydrogen and fusion.

- ✓ Focus research and development efforts on integrating current programs regarding hydrogen, fuel cells, and distributed energy.
- ✓ Support legislation reauthorizing the Hydrogen Energy Act.

➢ Promoting new construction of nuclear capacity that could significantly reduce future greenhouse gas emissions.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President support the expansion of nuclear energy in the United States as a major component of our national energy policy. Following are specific components of the recommendation:

- ✓ Encourage the Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC) to ensure that safety and environmental protection are high priorities as they prepare to evaluate and expedite applications for licensing new advanced-technology nuclear reactors.
- ✓ Encourage the NRC to facilitate efforts by utilities to expand nuclear energy generation in the United States by uprating existing nuclear plants safely.
- ✓ Encourage the NRC to relicense existing nuclear plants that meet or exceed safety standards.
- ✓ Direct the Secretary of Energy and the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency to assess the potential of nuclear energy to improve air quality.
- ✓ Increase resources as necessary for nuclear safety enforcement in light of the potential increase in generation.
- ✓ Use the best science to provide a deep geologic repository for nuclear waste.
- ✓ Support legislation clarifying that qualified funds set aside by plant owners for eventual decommissioning will not be taxed as part of the transaction.
- ✓ Support legislation to extend the Price–Anderson Act.

➢ Market-based three pollutant strategy

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the EPA Administrator to work with Congress to propose legislation that would establish a flexible, market-based program to significantly reduce and cap emissions of sulfur dioxide, nitrogen oxides, and mercury from electric power generators. Such a program (with appropriate measures to address local concerns) would provide significant public health benefits, including ancillary carbon benefits, even as we increase electricity supplies.

- ✓ Establish mandatory reduction targets for emissions of three main pollutants: sulfur dioxide, nitrogen oxides, and mercury.
- ✓ Phase in reductions over a reasonable period of time, similar to the successful acid rain reduction program established by the 1990 amendments to the Clean Air Act.
- ✓ Provide regulatory certainty to allow utilities to make modifications to their plants without fear of new litigation.

- ✓ Provide market-based incentives, such as emissions trading credits to help achieve the required reductions.

- Increasing research in clean coal technologies.

  The NEPD recommended that the President direct the Department of Energy to continue to develop advanced clean coal technology:

  - ✓ Investing $2 billion over 10 years to fund research in clean coal technologies.
  - ✓ Supporting a permanent extension of the existing research and development tax credit.
  - ✓ Directing federal agencies to explore regulatory approaches that will encourage advancements in environmental technology.

An Analysis of the Kyoto Protocol

"The Kyoto Protocol was fatally flawed in fundamental ways. But the process used to bring nations together to discuss our joint response to climate change is an important one."

– President George W. Bush

The Kyoto Protocol is fundamentally flawed. The Kyoto Protocol fails to establish a long-term goal based on science, poses serious and unnecessary risks to the U.S. and world economies, and is ineffective in addressing climate change because it excludes major parts of the world.

The Kyoto Protocol is ineffective in addressing climate change because it excludes developing countries. The Kyoto Protocol's emission reduction requirements apply only to industrialized countries. Developing countries can continue business as usual under the Kyoto Protocol, despite their rapidly growing emissions:

- Current data indicate that developing countries' net emissions (including emissions and uptake from land use activities) have already exceeded those of the developed world.[10]

- Moreover, annual developing country emissions of CO_2 will double between 1990 and 2010 – an increase that represents over twice as many tons as all of the reductions the United States would be required to take under the Kyoto Protocol.[11]

The Kyoto Protocol's targets are not based on science. Its targets and timetables were arrived at arbitrarily as a result of political negotiations, and are not related to any specific scientific information or long-term objective.

The Kyoto Protocol targets are precipitous. Under the Kyoto Protocol, the emission reduction target for the United States is 7% from 1990 levels for each year from 2008-2012. However, the figure of 7% is misleading, because it does not take into account growth in emissions between 1990 and 2012. The actual reduction from the U.S. current emissions trajectory for this period is over 30%.[12] In other words, meeting its target would require the United States to reduce its output of greenhouse emissions by one third in less than seven years. This would require U.S. firms to retire large amounts of capital stock prematurely, imposing substantial and unnecessary costs on the U.S. economy. The Kyoto Protocol also does not allow countries to count legitimate mitigation activities. In fact, it restricts the use of carbon sequestration as a means of achieving its objectives. Moreover, it does not address substances that impact climate change, such as black carbon and tropospheric ozone, reductions of which would also have significant health benefits.

[12] United States submission to the UNFCCC, 2001

The Kyoto Protocol risks significantly harming the U.S. and global economies. The Kyoto Protocol would require the United States to meet its target no matter what the cost, which could be substantial:

- Most models suggest a reduction in U.S. GDP of 1% to 2% by 2010 as a result of Kyoto without emissions trading.[13] A 2% reduction is comparable to the impact of the oil shock of the 1970s.

- A U.S. Department of Energy model suggests a reduction of as much as 4%[14] in GDP under a scenario in which the United States does not establish implementing regulations before 2005 and does not engage in emissions trading. Under such a scenario, the U.S. economy could be transformed from one of strong growth to recession, with potentially significant repercussions for the global economy.

Other major industrial countries also have very stringent targets. The difficulties many countries will have in meeting their targets raises serious questions about the viability of the Kyoto Protocol framework.

The Kyoto Protocol would leave the United States dangerously dependent on other countries to meet its emission targets. Under the Kyoto Protocol's emissions trading system, countries are allowed to buy and sell part of their emissions allowances. Most economic models indicate that achieving reductions through emissions trading with other countries may cost about half of what it would cost to achieve the same reductions domestically under the Kyoto Protocol.[15] Many analysts have pointed to trading as the only way that the United States could meet its Kyoto target. Yet few countries will have many excess tons to sell other than Russia and several other Eastern European countries that negotiated targets well above their expected emissions during the period 2008-2012. There is no guarantee that these allowances would be available:

- In order to sell allowances, countries must meet measuring and monitoring requirements. Some countries with excess emissions are far from meeting these requirements now, and it is likely that the United States and other countries would not know until at least 2007 whether they could meet their requirements. This creates enormous uncertainty about the cost of meeting the Kyoto Protocol until well after the United States has assumed its obligations.

- Even if these countries met their requirements and were allowed to sell their emission allowances, U.S. purchases of allowances would amount to many billions of dollars of financial transfers annually – without achieving any meaningful greenhouse gas emission reductions or climate benefit.

Advancing Technology to Address Climate Change

"America is a leader in technology and innovation. We all believe technology offers great promise to significantly reduce emissions. So we are creating the 'National Climate Change Technology Initiative.' "

– President George W. Bush

Executive Summary

New technologies hold the promise of increasing our supply of energy more efficiently and more cleanly. Technology has also played and will continue to play an important role in reducing greenhouse gas emissions and controlling costs. Because greenhouse gas emissions come from many sectors of the economy, a wide variety of technologies will be needed. A portfolio of technologies to address climate change could include energy efficient technologies; lower carbon-emitting technologies; carbon capture, storage and sequestration technologies; and new technological discoveries yet to be made.

To advance the technology across each of these areas, President Bush will create the National Climate Change Technology Initiative. The President is charging the Secretaries of Commerce and Energy, working with other agencies, to:

- Evaluate the current state of U.S. climate change technology research and development and make recommendations for improvements.
- Provide guidance on strengthening basic research at universities and national laboratories, including the development of the advanced mitigation technologies that offer the greatest promise for low-cost reductions of greenhouse gas emissions.
- Develop opportunities to enhance private-public partnerships in applied research and development to expedite innovative and cost-effective approaches to reduce greenhouse gas emissions.
- Make recommendations for funding demonstration projects for cutting-edge technologies.
- Develop improved technologies for measuring and monitoring gross and net greenhouse gas emissions.

The National Climate Change Technology Initiative also will enhance coordination across federal agencies, and among the federal government, universities, and the private sector.

The Importance of Technology to Mitigate Climate Change

Technology will continue to play an important role in reducing greenhouse gas emissions and controlling costs. The long-term objective of the 1992 Framework Convention on Climate Change – to stabilize greenhouse gas concentrations in the atmosphere – can be addressed in two ways. First, by reducing emissions of greenhouse gases. Because greenhouse gases are emitted so broadly across society, no single technology appears to be sufficient to stabilize the increasing atmospheric greenhouse gas concentrations. Rather, a portfolio of technologies aimed at improving energy efficiency, and increasing the use of low carbon fuels will help to reduce greenhouse gas emissions and ultimately to stabilize concentrations.

Second, greenhouse gas concentrations can be addressed by means of capturing and sequestering gases, either at the source or after they have been released into the atmosphere. Limited carbon capture is occurring today, using currently available technologies. Continued research and development is needed to explore advanced chemical and biological mechanisms to remove carbon dioxide from the atmosphere.

General Investment Criteria

The Presidents of the National Academy of Sciences, National Academy of Engineering, and the Institute of Medicine have provided some general principles for government investment in technology. In "Preparing for the 21st Century: Science and Technology Policy in a New Era" (October 23, 1997), the Presidents of the Academies offered criteria for such investment, including:

- Direct government investments in science and technology should be focused on long-range, broadly useful research in basic technology and science, both of which produce benefits far in excess of what private sector entities can capture for themselves.

- The federal government should cooperate with the private sector so that the United States maintains a position of leadership in those technologies that promise to have a major and continuing impact on broad areas of industrial and economic performance.

- But the government need not invest in fields in which the private sector already has programs of development in place. Private firms have the primary responsibility for product development, but federal and state governments play an important role in enhancing the civilian technology base and its adoption through their economic, regulatory, and trade policies, their support for research and development, and their own procurement of technology.

- Maintaining U.S. leadership in science and technology despite budget constraints will require discipline in the allocation of resources for federal investments. Within the general constraints determined by national priorities, the selection of individual projects must reflect the highest standards of the scientific and technical community.

Assessing the Current State of U.S. Climate Change Technology Research

The U.S. government has funded research to develop several technologies that mitigate climate change. In general, these technologies are aimed at: increasing energy efficiency to reduce the amount of energy consumed for goods produced in the economy; creating opportunities to switch to fuels and products that emit relatively lower amounts of greenhouse gases; enhancing carbon removal and storage in terrestrial, ocean, and geological sinks; and exploring innovative concepts along unconventional paths to discover new ways to reduce greenhouse gas emissions, such as advanced biotechnology concepts.

In order to advance climate change technology research, President Bush will:

- Charge the Secretary of Commerce, the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, and the Secretary of Energy to evaluate the current state of U.S. climate change technology research and development and make recommendations for improvements.

Strengthening Basic Climate Change Technology Research

The development of certain climate change mitigation technologies may be impractical for the private sector. Such technologies have some unique characteristics, including instances where the:

- Benefits are too widely spread for any one company to recover its investment at a profit;
- Cost or risk is too great for any individual company to bear alone; or
- Potential benefits are too far in the future to pass the threshold of private investment criteria.

Yet these advanced concepts may have the greatest potential to reduce greenhouse gas emissions at very low cost. For example, technological advances in areas such as biotechnology offer the potential for dramatic innovations in many areas. An important technology is the development of bioreactors that can harness the potential of microbial communities, such as photosynthetic bacteria, to produce clean fuels such as hydrogen. These bioreactors can exploit our increasing understanding of the biochemical pathways of microbial communities. While these biotechnologies are currently producing higher value products, like pharmaceuticals, significant new scientific research will be required for the direct production of fuels.

Similarly, scientists have begun work on promising new technologies for the cost-effective capture and sequestration of carbon in terrestrial and marine ecosystems. These opportunities may provide other environmental benefits as well, such as improved soil quality, better retention of moisture and nutrients, and reduced soil erosion. Researchers at the Department of Energy, for example, are studying "mineral carbonization," a technique for turning gaseous CO_2 into an environmentally-benign mineral that could be used to refill mine pits in land reclamation efforts.

Research and development efforts to date show promise for several options. However, many options are still emerging concepts both in the United States and internationally. Estimates of their potential for mitigating climate change are large, but highly uncertain. Markets for these or other technologies will be developed if buyers have some assurance about the quantity and quality of the product they are purchasing. In addition, there are many scientific and technological challenges regarding costs, environmental impacts, and public acceptability that must be resolved before these climate mitigation technologies can reach their potential. How and how much to invest in these areas are questions that must be answered to ensure that we as a society can harness our technological resources and capabilities and find the most cost-effective and environmentally sound solutions to the risks posed by increasing atmospheric concentrations of greenhouse gases.

Therefore, President Bush has directed that the National Climate Change Technology Initiative will:

- Provide guidance on strengthening basic research at universities and national laboratories, including the development of the advanced mitigation technologies that offer the greatest promise for low-cost reductions of greenhouse gas emissions.

Enhancing Private-Public Partnerships

It is important to effectively use the technologies that are and will soon become available. For example, technologies designed to increase energy efficiency, such as industrial applications of combined heat and power (CHP), enable both the local generation of electricity and the efficient use of the byproduct heat. When the quantities of the heat and power produced are well matched to the requirements of an industrial plant or facility, total efficiency of the fuel utilization can reach 90 percent, avoiding significant emissions of CO_2.

Similarly, the United States can achieve significant reductions of energy consumption and the related emissions of greenhouse gases through building systems with integrated electronic sensors, "smart" windows, and computers to monitor, maintain, and manage building operations. Also, one of the most challenging and important elements of a comprehensive strategy to address long-term greenhouse gas emission reductions is to improve the efficiency of our transportation fleet. The development of higher efficiency, hybrid passenger vehicles is an important first step.

In addition to energy efficiency, there are opportunities to increase the use of fuels that emit fewer greenhouse gases. For example, increased use of biomass residues and development of herbaceous crops, like native American prairie switchgrass, can mitigate greenhouse gases from coal-fired power plants and reduce air toxic emissions. Similarly, biomass can be converted into simple chemicals and plastic substitutes from which a new chemical industry can be formed.

Currently, the Federal government has established partners in the private sector to advance these technologies. It is critical to enhance this role and ensure that partnerships with industry are directed toward the most mutually beneficial outcomes.

Therefore, President Bush has directed that the National Climate Change Technology Initiative will:

- Develop opportunities to enhance private-public partnerships in applied research and development to expedite innovative and cost-effective approaches to reduce greenhouse gas emissions.

Promoting Cutting Edge Technology

Cutting-edge technologies hold the promise of helping to reduce emissions of greenhouse gases. For instance, geothermal power plants have a proven record of performance for producing reliable base-load power with minimal environmental effects. However, substantial known resources have not been tapped. Advanced technology is being developed to make more geothermal resources economical over a larger portion of the country. In response to the electricity shortages in the West, a demonstration of the economic and environmental benefits of the next generation of geothermal power plant technology, such as improved condensers and heat exchangers, will spur new development. As much as 100 to 300 megawatts of additional geothermal power to replace combustion-fired facilities will become available at new and existing plants within the next two years.

Fuel cells, a product of America's space program, hold great promise for reducing emissions. As noted in the National Energy Policy, the first generation fuel cells for stationary power applications entered commercial markets in 1995 and the second generation is currently in the demonstration phase. Innovative demonstration projects will reduce the high cost of this technology and offer a great potential to meet our energy needs.

Therefore, President Bush has directed that the National Climate Change Technology Initiative will:

- Make recommendations for funding demonstration projects for cutting-edge technologies.

Technology for Measuring and Monitoring Gross and Net Emissions

A fundamental challenge in attracting private sector investment to land-based greenhouse gas emission reduction or carbon sequestration projects is the ability to accurately quantify the net changes. Private sector investors are reluctant to participate in projects without reliable and credible quantification of the uncertainties associated with different land management practices. Cost effective measurement systems will not only increase the attractiveness of agricultural greenhouse gas projects to investors, but can also provide valuable information to individual farmers and ranchers in optimizing the use of fuel, fertilizers and other substances.

Significant advances in the science of remote sensing, coupled with land-based measurements, create new opportunities to monitor and verify greenhouse gas emissions. New and improved sensors that can be mounted on earth observing satellites and high altitude aircraft can deliver a unique capability to regularly monitor greenhouse gases with high accuracy, including carbon dioxide, methane, and ozone. This effort requires collaboration between the federal government and the private sector.

Therefore, President Bush has directed that the National Climate Change Technology Initiative will:

- Develop improved technologies for measuring and monitoring gross and net greenhouse gas emissions.

ADVANCING THE SCIENCE OF CLIMATE CHANGE

"MY CABINET-LEVEL WORKING GROUP HAS MET REGULARLY FOR THE LAST TEN WEEKS TO REVIEW THE MOST RECENT, MOST ACCURATE, AND MOST COMPREHENSIVE SCIENCE. THEY HAVE HEARD FROM SCIENTISTS OFFERING A WIDE SPECTRUM OF VIEWS; THEY HAVE REVIEWED THE FACTS, AND THEY HAVE LISTENED TO MANY THEORIES AND SUPPOSITIONS. THE WORKING GROUP ASKED THE HIGHLY RESPECTED NATIONAL ACADEMY OF SCIENCES TO PROVIDE US THE MOST UP-TO-DATE INFORMATION ABOUT WHAT IS KNOWN – AND WHAT IS NOT KNOWN – ON THE SCIENCE OF CLIMATE CHANGE…THE UNITED STATES [WILL] HELP LEAD THE WAY BY ADVANCING THE SCIENCE ON CLIMATE CHANGE."

-- PRESIDENT
GEORGE W. BUSH

Executive Summary

The United States leads the world in climate change research, spending more than the 15 nations of the European Union and Japan combined. Over the past decade, the United States has invested nearly $18 billion in such research and has increased our understanding of changes in climate, human links to these changes, and possible consequences.

To have the most up-to-date information of what is known and unknown about the science of climate change, the Cabinet-level climate change working group requested a report from the National Academy of Sciences (NAS). The NAS report identified substantial uncertainty in critical areas, such as:

- The feedbacks in the climate system that determine the magnitude and rate of temperature increases;
- The future usage of fossil fuels and the future emissions of methane;
- How much carbon is sequestered by oceans and other sinks and how much remains in the atmosphere;
- The details of regional climate change resulting from global climate change;
- The nature and causes of the natural variability of climate, its interactions with forced changes, and the direct and indirect effects of aerosols.

The National Academy of Sciences concluded, "[m]aking progress in reducing the large uncertainties in projections of future climate will require addressing a number of fundamental scientific questions relating to the buildup of greenhouse gases in the atmosphere and the behavior of the climate system."

To ensure that policies are shaped, and continue to be shaped, by the best science, President Bush will work aggressively to advance the science of climate change. Today, the President is announcing the U.S. Climate Change Research Initiative, which:

- Directs the Secretary of Commerce, working with other agencies, to set priorities for additional investments in climate change research, to review such investments, and to maximize coordination among federal agencies;
- Fully funds all priority research areas that the Secretary of Commerce's review finds are underfunded or need to be accelerated relative to other research;

- Challenges the major greenhouse gas emitting countries to increase significantly their investments in high priority areas of climate change research;
- Provides up to $25 million, and calls on other developed countries to provide matching funds, to help build climate observation systems in developing countries; and

- Proposes a joint venture with the EU, Japan and others to develop state-of-the-art climate modeling to help us better predict the causes and consequences of climate change.

U.S. Climate Research to Date

U.S. Global Change Research Program

The United States leads the world in climate change research, spending approximately $1.6 billion annually. The United States is responsible for half of the world's annual climate change research expenditures, three times more than the next largest contributor and larger than the contributions of Japan and all 15 nations of the European Union combined.

The U.S. Global Change Research Program (USGCRP) is a national research program that coordinates most of the federal government's research on climate change. Definition of the program began under the Reagan Administration; the program became a presidential initiative under President George Bush, and was codified by Congress in the Global Change Research Act of 1990.

Since its establishment in 1990, USGCRP has spent approximately $18 billion. The President's fiscal year 2002 budget requests $1.6 billion for USGCRP. One half of this investment is devoted to climate change science and the other half to associated satellite systems. During its first decade, USGCRP research activities have identified a series of global scale changes, including ozone depletion, climate change, and land cover change. USGCRP has also explored and categorized likely human links to these changes, improved forecasts of the El Nino-Southern Oscillation, and increased understanding of other climate changes. The USGCRP has also developed and deployed a series of remote sensing satellites that could form the basis of a global environmental observing system, and has developed models to analyze the climate process and produce scenarios of potential future climate change and possible consequences.

The USGCRP currently conducts research and observations in the following areas: Understanding the Earth's Climate System; Composition and Chemistry of the Atmosphere; Global Water Cycle; Carbon Cycle Science; Biology and Biochemistry of Ecosystems; Human Dimensions of Global Change; and Paleoenvironment/Paleoclimate (analysis of prehistoric changes in climate). Ten federal agencies participate in the USGCRP and their respective roles are described in Annex I.

Key Gaps in Science of Climate Change

Despite the United States' intensive investment in climate change science over the past decade, numerous gaps remain in our understanding of climate change. The National Academy of Sciences identified in its report, Climate Change Science: An Analysis of Some Key Questions (June 2001), critical uncertainties about the science of climate change. At the most fundamental level, the report indicated the need to better understand the causes of warming. The National Academy of Sciences stated, "Greenhouse gases are accumulating in Earth's atmosphere as a result of human activities, causing surface air temperatures and subsurface ocean temperatures to rise. Temperatures are, in fact, rising. The changes observed over the last several decades are likely mostly due to human activities, but we cannot rule out that some significant part of these changes are also a reflection of natural variability."

The National Academy of Sciences report goes on to identify a range of specific areas of scientific uncertainty that require additional study and research. These gaps include:

- How much carbon is sequestered by oceans and terrestrial sinks and how much remains in the atmosphere is uncertain:
  - ✓ "How land contributes, by location and processes, to exchanges of carbon with the atmosphere is still highly uncertain. . . ." (p. 11)
  - ✓ "These estimates [of future carbon dioxide climate forcings] . . . are only approximate because of uncertainty about how efficiently the ocean and terrestrial biosphere will sequester atmospheric CO_2." (p. 13)
  - ✓ "How much of the carbon from future use of fossil fuels will be seen as increases in carbon dioxide in the atmosphere will depend on what fractions are taken up by land and by the oceans. The exchanges with land occur on various time scales, out to centuries for soil decomposition in high latitudes, and they are sensitive to climate change. Their projection into the future is highly problematic." (p. 18)

- The feedbacks in the climate system that determine the magnitude and rate of temperature increases are uncertain:

- ✓ "Because there is considerable uncertainty in current understanding of how the climate system varies naturally and reacts to emissions of greenhouse gases and aerosols, current estimates of the magnitude of future warming should be regarded as tentative and subject to future adjustments (either upward or downward)." (p. 1)

- ✓ "Much of the difference in predictions of global warming by various climate models is attributable to the fact that each model represents these [feedback] processes in its own particular way. These uncertainties will remain until a more fundamental understanding of the processes that control atmospheric relative humidity and clouds is achieved." (p. 4)

- ➢ The direct and indirect effects of aerosols are uncertain:

  - ✓ "The greatest uncertainty about the aerosol climate forcing—indeed, the largest of all the uncertainties about global climate forcings—is probably the indirect effect of aerosols on clouds." (p. 14)
  - ✓ "The great uncertainty about this indirect aerosol climate forcing presents a severe handicap both for the interpretation of past climate change and for future assessments of climate changes." (p. 14)
  - ✓ "Climate forcing by anthropogenic aerosols is a large source of uncertainty about future climate change." (p. 13)
  - ✓ "Because of the scientific uncertainties associated with the sources and composition of carbonaceous aerosols, projections of future impacts on climate are difficult." (p. 12)

- ➢ The details and impacts of regional climate change resulting from global climate change are uncertain:

  - ✓ "On the regional scale and in the longer term, there is much more uncertainty" with respect to effects on agriculture and forestry. (p. 19)
  - ✓ "The Northern Hemisphere as a whole experienced a slight cooling from 1946-75, and the cooling during that period was quite marked over the eastern United States. The cause of this hiatus in the warming is still under debate." (p. 16)
  - ✓ "Health outcomes in response to climate change are the subject of intense debate. . . .The understanding of the relationships between weather/climate and human health is in its infancy and therefore the health consequences of climate change are poorly understood. The costs, benefits, and availability of resources for adaptation are also uncertain." (p. 20)
  - ✓ "Changes in storm frequency and intensity are one of the more uncertain elements of future climate change prediction." (p. 20)

- ➢ The nature and causes of the natural variability of climate and its interactions with forced changes are uncertain:

  - ✓ "Because of the large and still uncertain level of natural variability inherent in the climate record and the uncertainties in the time histories of the various forcing agents (and particularly aerosols), a causal linkage between the buildup of greenhouse gases in the atmosphere and the observed climate changes during the 20th century cannot be unequivocally established." (p. 17)

- ✓ The value of indirect effect of ozone changes induced by solar ultraviolet irradiance variations "remains highly uncertain." (p. 14)

- ➢ The future usage of fossil fuels and the future emissions of methane are uncertain:

  - ✓ "With a better understanding of the sources and sinks of methane, it may be possible to encourage practices . . . that lead to a decrease in atmospheric methane and significantly reduce future climate change." (p. 13)
  - ✓ "There is no definitive scientific basis for choosing among several possible explanations for these variations in the rates of change of global methane contributions, making it very difficult to predict its future atmospheric concentrations." (p. 11)

In response to these gaps in our knowledge, the National Academy of Sciences study also recommends, "research that couples physical, chemical biological and human systems; an improved capability of integrating scientific knowledge, including its uncertainty, into effective decision support systems, and an ability to conduct research at the regional or sectoral level that promotes analysis of the response of human and natural systems to multiple stresses."

The NAS report also indicates that to advance the understanding of climate change, it will be necessary to have "a global observing system in support of long term climate monitoring and prediction [and] concentration on large-scale modeling through increased, dedicated supercomputing and human resources." In addition to the recent National Academy of Sciences report, the USGCRP has updated its ten-year plan and submitted it to the National Research Council (NRC) for review. High priority areas for further research are identified in numerous recent reports and documents, such as: "Global Environmental Change: Research Pathways for the Next Decade" (NRC 1998), "Capacity of US Climate Modeling to Support Climate Change Assessment Activities" (NRC, 1998), "Adequacy of Climate Observing Systems" (NRC, 1999), and others.

Advancing the Science

The National Academy of Sciences report states that an "effective strategy for advancing the understanding of climate change will also require...efforts to ensure that climate research is supported and managed to assure innovation, effectiveness and efficiency." Over the decade of the USGCRP, interagency management of the program has weakened. The National Research Council in its report, "Global Environmental Change: Research Pathways for the Next Decade" (NRC 1998), identified the problem, and the USGCRP draft ten-year plan has proposed changes to the management structure. Such issues merit careful and high-level review, in consultation with the Congress.

Therefore, to advance the science of climate change and focus efforts on the many key areas of uncertainty, President Bush will:

- Direct the Secretary of Commerce, working with other agencies, to set priorities for additional investments in climate change research, to review such investments, and to maximize coordination among federal agencies.
- Fully fund all priority research areas that the review finds are underfunded or need to be accelerated relative to other research. Such areas could include the carbon cycle, climate modeling, and global water cycle.

The United States is making significant investments in the science of climate change and is pledging to accelerate its own research. Climate change is a global problem, however, and other nations must continue to advance the state of scientific knowledge.

The National Research Council, the US Global Change Research Program, and the World Meteorological Organization have all identified the building of a global observing system to monitor climate as being crucial to improving our understanding of the science of climate change. This system must include developing countries that have limited resources to make the necessary measurements.

The United States, Europe, and Japan each have significant climate modeling capabilities. The United States leads the world in the basic science of climate modeling, and Europe and Japan have built dedicated centers for climate modeling with a clearly defined mission.

Therefore, to enhance research, build a global climate observation system, and improve climate modeling, President Bush will:

- Challenge the major greenhouse gas emitting countries to increase significantly their investments in high priority areas of climate change research.
- Provide up to $25 million to help build climate observation systems in developing countries throughout the world, and call upon other developed countries to provide matching funds for such an investment.
- Propose a joint venture with the European Union, Japan and others to develop state-of-the-art climate modeling to help us better predict the causes and consequences of climate change.

Annex I

Agency Roles in the USGCRP

US Department of Agriculture: USDA-sponsored research focuses on understanding terrestrial systems and the effects of global change (including water balance, atmospheric deposition, vegetative quality, and UV-B radiation) on food, fiber, and forestry production in agricultural, forest, and range ecosystems. USDA estimates changes in carbon stocks on forests and agricultural lands and greenhouse gas emissions from agricultural sources, and performs research on how agricultural and forestry activities such as afforestation, changes in tillage practices, and bioenergy can contribute to a reduction in greenhouse gases.

Department of Commerce/National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA): NOAA's ground, ocean, and satellite observations, with an emphasis on oceanic and atmospheric dynamics, circulation, and chemistry, are an important part of the U.S. research program. They have resulted in improvements in climate modeling, prediction, and information management capabilities. NOAA also sponsors a wide range of studies on ocean-land-atmosphere interactions, the global hydrological cycle, and the role of global transfers of carbon dioxide among the atmosphere, ocean and terrestrial biosphere in climate change; the projection and assessment of variability across multiple timescales and the study of the relationship between the natural climate system and society and the development of methodologies for applying climate information to problems of social and economic consequences.

Department of Defense: The Department of Defense continues a history of participation in the USGCRP through sponsored research that concurrently satisfies national security requirements and stated goals of the USGCRP.

Department of Energy: Research supported by DOE's Office of Biological and Environmental Research (BER) addresses the effects of energy production and use on the global Earth system, primarily through studies of climate response. It includes research in climate modeling, atmospheric chemistry and transport, atmospheric properties and processes affecting the Earth's radiation balance and sources and sinks of energy-related greenhouse gases (primarily CO_2). It also includes research on the consequences of atmospheric and climatic changes on ecological systems and resources, critical data needs for the detection and attribution of climate change, tools and methods needed to conduct scientific assessments of climate change, and education and training of scientists and researchers in global change.

National Institutes of Health: Four NIH institutes support research on the health effects of UV and near-UV radiation. Their main objectives include increased understanding of the effects of UV and near-UV radiation exposure on target organs (e.g., eyes, skin, immune system) and of the molecular changes that lead to these effects, and the development of strategies to prevent the initiation or promotion of disease before it is clinically defined. National Institutes of Environmental Health Sciences (NIEHS) supports research on the health effects of chlorofluorocarbon replacement chemicals, including studies on the metabolism and toxicity of hydrochlorofluorocarbons and halogenated hydrocarbons.

Department of the Interior/U.S. Geological Survey (USGS): Research at USGS examines terrestrial and marine processes and the natural history of global change, including the interactions between climate and the hydrologic system. Studies seek to understand the character of past and present environments and the geological, biological, hydrological, and geochemical processes involved in environmental change.

Environmental Protection Agency: EPA's Global Change Research Program is an assessment-oriented program with primary emphasis on understanding the potential consequences of climate variability and change on human health, ecosystems, and socio-economic systems in the United States. This entails: (1) improving the scientific basis for evaluating effects of global change in the context of other stresses and human dimensions (as humans are catalysts of and respond to global change); (2) conducting assessments of the risks and opportunities presented by global change; and (3) assessing adaptation options to improve society's ability to effectively respond to the risks and opportunities presented by global change as they emerge.

National Aeronautics and Space Administration: NASA research efforts in global change involve space-based studies of the Earth as an integrated system, including research and satellite programs studying atmospheric chemistry and ozone; ocean surface winds, tropical precipitation and the global hydrological cycle and climate variability cycle; and the global carbon cycle, ocean biological productivity and land surface vegetation and ecosystems. The space-based activity complements ongoing ground-based research programs in the observation, understanding, and modeling of radiation, climate dynamics, and hydrology and water resources; ecosystem dynamics and biogeochemical cycles; atmospheric chemistry; and the processing, archiving, retrieval, dissemination, and use of global change data. The focus is Earth system science, which involves interdisciplinary research and coupled modeling. Development of algorithms for retrieval of the information content of space-based observations is carried out as part of the flight mission.

National Science Foundation: NSF global change research programs support research and related activities to advance the fundamental understanding of dynamic physical, biological, and socio-economic systems and the interactions among them. The programs encourage interdisciplinary activities with particular focus on Earth system processes and the consequences of change. NSF programs facilitate data acquisition and information management activities necessary for fundamental research on global change, promote the enhancement of models designed to improve our understanding of Earth system processes and interactions, and develop advanced analytic methods to facilitate basic research. NSF also supports fundamental research on the general processes used by organizations to identify and evaluate policies for mitigation, adaptation, and other responses to the challenge of varying environmental conditions.

Smithsonian Institution: The Smithsonian Institution program strives to improve knowledge of the natural processes involved in global climate change, to provide a long-term repository of climate-relevant research materials for present and future studies, and to bring this knowledge to various audiences, ranging from scholarly to lay public. The unique contribution of the Smithsonian Institution is a long-term perspective – e.g., undertaking investigations that may require extended study before producing useful results and conducting observations on sufficiently long (e.g. decadal) time-scales to resolve human-caused modification of natural variability.

Developing an Effective and Science Based Approach to Addressing Global Climate Change

Summary

- The Bush Administration is working with our allies to develop an effective and science-based approach to addressing global climate change. Global climate change is an issue that affects the entire world -- and it is an issue that must be addressed by the entire world.

- The surface temperature of the earth is warming and concentrations of greenhouse gases, especially CO2, have increased substantially since the beginning of the Industrial revolution – and the National Academy of Sciences indicates this increase is due in large part to human activity.

- The National Academy of Sciences report concludes that significant areas of uncertainty remain, including how much effect natural fluctuations in climate may have had on warming, how fast climate changes will occur, the magnitude of those changes, and their impacts.

- The Kyoto Protocol is fundamentally flawed:

  - Its targets have no scientific basis.
  - Kyoto's targets are unrealistic -- many countries will not achieve them.
  - Kyoto's targets are draconian -- requiring a 30% reduction in U.S. greenhouse gas emissions. Compliance with these targets could cause a 1% to 2% reduction in the United States GDP by 2010 – a reduction comparable to the oil shock of the 1970's – and would increase prices for consumers and cause layoffs of workers.
  - Kyoto is ineffective: it excludes developing countries, whose net emissions of greenhouse gases already exceed those of industrialized countries.

- While the U.S. rejects Kyoto, the President has committed the U.S. to a leadership role in addressing the issue of climate change.

- The U.S. already takes many proactive steps to address global climate change:

  - The U.S. spends $1.6 billion annually on climate science -- more than Japan and the 15 EU countries combined.
  - The U.S.' many initiatives have produced results -- the carbon-intensity of the economy has been lowered by 15% since 1990.
  - The President's Comprehensive National Energy Plan could further cut greenhouse gas emissions through conservation, improved energy efficiency, and increased reliance on natural gas, renewables, hydro and nuclear power.

- The President wants to increase the U.S.' efforts to address global climate change by:

  - Establishing the "U.S. Climate Change Research Initiative" to advance the science of climate change, focusing on key areas of uncertainty.

- ✓ Fully funds all priority research areas
- ✓ Challenges major greenhouse gas emitting countries to increase significantly their investments.
- ✓ Provides matching funds to help build climate observation systems in developing countries
- ✓ Proposes a joint venture with the EU, Japan and others to develop state-of-the-art climate modeling

- Launching the "National Climate Change Technology Initiative", tasking the Secretaries of Commerce and Energy to strengthen basic research and develop public-private partnerships to bring cutting edge technologies to market; and

- Increasing cooperative efforts within our hemisphere and globally, especially with developing countries, tasking the Secretary of State and others to build partnerships to measure and mitigate emissions, undertake research, and invest in forestation.

➢ The President directed the Cabinet-level climate change working group to consider approaches to reduce greenhouse gas emissions, drawing on the power of markets and the promise of technology. That effort will be guided by several basic principles:

- The approach must be consistent with the long-term goal of stabilizing concentrations of greenhouse gases in the atmosphere.
- Our actions should be measured, as we learn more and build on it.
- Our approach must be flexible to adjust to new information and take advantage of new technology.
- We must ensure continued economic growth in the U.S. and the world.
- We should pursue market-based incentives and spur technological innovation.
- And our approach must be based on global participation, including developing countries.

➢ The President directed Secretary Powell and EPA Administrator Whitman to work actively with friends and allies to explore common approaches to climate change consistent with these principles.

The President's Bipartisan Social Security Commission Holds Organizational Meeting

Action:

- Today the President's Commission to Strengthen Social Security will hold its initial organizational meeting. This meeting, and all other meetings of the full commission, are open to citizens and the media. The President thinks it is important to hear the views of all Americans and to give them complete access to the Commission's deliberations and activities.

Why is it Important to Strengthen Social Security?

- According to the most recent report of the Social Security Trustees, by 2016, Social Security payroll taxes would no longer be sufficient to pay full promised benefits. This means that starting in 2016, the Social Security system will not generate enough cash on hand to pay promised benefits. In the absence of reform, either taxes will have to be increased, benefits or other spending cut, or public debt increased.

- Real rates of return for today's young workers are expected to be only around 2%, well below the level for earlier generations. Real rates of return for future generations would decline further if solvency is attained solely by increasing taxes or reducing benefits -- an outcome that President Bush is determined to prevent.

- Social Security currently requires that participants contribute tax dollars to earn benefits that are determined wholly by the political process. Participants have no ownership of any portion of their accrued benefits, and cannot pass them on to their children.

- Strengthening Social Security will protect the benefits of current seniors and those near to retirement by making the system solvent and sound. Bipartisan reform will also help ensure that future generations of seniors have had an opportunity to maximize their retirement dollars.

The President's Bipartisan Commission on Social Security:

- President Bush has demonstrated his commitment to tackle tough problems by stepping forward to provide much-needed leadership in the area of Social Security.

- The President recently signed an Executive Order creating a bipartisan, 16-member, commission to study and report back this fall with specific recommendations to preserve Social Security for seniors while building wealth for younger Americans.

- The commission will be co-chaired by former Senator Daniel Patrick Moynihan (D-NY), and Dick Parsons (Co-Chief Operating Officer of AOL/Time Warner). The commission will make recommendations to modernize and restore fiscal soundness to Social Security, using six key principles developed by the President as a roadmap:

- Modernization must not change Social Security benefits for retirees or near-retirees.
- The entire Social Security surplus must be dedicated to Social Security only.
- Social Security payroll taxes must not be increased.
- Government must not invest Social Security funds in the stock market.
- Modernization must preserve Social Security's disability and survivors components.
- Modernization must include individually controlled, voluntary personal retirement accounts, which will augment the Social Security safety net.

➢ President Bush is tackling a tough issue that affects all generations. For several years, despite warnings of Social Security's insolvency from the Social Security Trustees, the federal government has failed to take the actions necessary to strengthen the Social Security program.

➢ The creation of the Social Security Commission is a fulfillment of the President's pledge of a bipartisan process to develop real solutions, and to end a culture of stalemate. The President is doing in office what he said he would do.

The President's Bipartisan Social Security Commission Holds Organizational Meeting

Action:

- Today the President's Commission to Strengthen Social Security will hold its initial organizational meeting. This meeting, and all other meetings of the full commission, are open to citizens and the media. The President thinks it is important to hear the views of all Americans and to give them complete access to the Commission's deliberations and activities.

Why is it Important to Strengthen Social Security?

- According to the most recent report of the Social Security Trustees, by 2016, Social Security payroll taxes would no longer be sufficient to pay full promised benefits. This means that starting in 2016, the Social Security system will not generate enough cash on hand to pay promised benefits. In the absence of reform, either taxes will have to be increased, benefits or other spending cut, or public debt increased.

- Real rates of return for today's young workers are expected to be only around 2%, well below the level for earlier generations. Real rates of return for future generations would decline further if solvency is attained solely by increasing taxes or reducing benefits -- an outcome that President Bush is determined to prevent.

- Social Security currently requires that participants contribute tax dollars to earn benefits that are determined wholly by the political process. Participants have no ownership of any portion of their accrued benefits, and cannot pass them on to their children.

- Strengthening Social Security will protect the benefits of current seniors and those near to retirement by making the system solvent and sound. Bipartisan reform will also help ensure that future generations of seniors have had an opportunity to maximize their retirement dollars.

The President's Bipartisan Commission on Social Security:

- President Bush has demonstrated his commitment to tackle tough problems by stepping forward to provide much-needed leadership in the area of Social Security.

- The President recently signed an Executive Order creating a bipartisan, 16-member, commission to study and report back this fall with specific recommendations to preserve Social Security for seniors while building wealth for younger Americans.

- The commission will be co-chaired by former Senator Daniel Patrick Moynihan (D-NY), and Dick Parsons (Co-Chief Operating Officer of AOL/Time Warner). The commission will make recommendations to modernize and restore fiscal soundness to Social Security, using six key principles developed by the President as a roadmap:

- Modernization must not change Social Security benefits for retirees or near-retirees.
- The entire Social Security surplus must be dedicated to Social Security only.
- Social Security payroll taxes must not be increased.
- Government must not invest Social Security funds in the stock market.
- Modernization must preserve Social Security's disability and survivors components.
- Modernization must include individually controlled, voluntary personal retirement accounts, which will augment the Social Security safety net.

➢ President Bush is tackling a tough issue that affects all generations. For several years, despite warnings of Social Security's insolvency from the Social Security Trustees, the federal government has failed to take the actions necessary to strengthen the Social Security program.

➢ The creation of the Social Security Commission is a fulfillment of the President's pledge of a bipartisan process to develop real solutions, and to end a culture of stalemate. The President is doing in office what he said he would do.

The President's Bipartisan Social Security Commission Holds Organizational Meeting

Action:

- Today the President's Commission to Strengthen Social Security will hold its initial organizational meeting. This meeting, and all other meetings of the full commission, are open to citizens and the media. The President thinks it is important to hear the views of all Americans and to give them complete access to the Commission's deliberations and activities.

Why is it Important to Strengthen Social Security?

- According to the most recent report of the Social Security Trustees, by 2016, Social Security payroll taxes would no longer be sufficient to pay full promised benefits. This means that starting in 2016, the Social Security system will not generate enough cash on hand to pay promised benefits. In the absence of reform, either taxes will have to be increased, benefits or other spending cut, or public debt increased.

- Real rates of return for today's young workers are expected to be only around 2%, well below the level for earlier generations. Real rates of return for future generations would decline further if solvency is attained solely by increasing taxes or reducing benefits -- an outcome that President Bush is determined to prevent.

- Social Security currently requires that participants contribute tax dollars to earn benefits that are determined wholly by the political process. Participants have no ownership of any portion of their accrued benefits, and cannot pass them on to their children.

- Strengthening Social Security will protect the benefits of current seniors and those near to retirement by making the system solvent and sound. Bipartisan reform will also help ensure that future generations of seniors have had an opportunity to maximize their retirement dollars.

The President's Bipartisan Commission on Social Security:

- President Bush has demonstrated his commitment to tackle tough problems by stepping forward to provide much-needed leadership in the area of Social Security.

- The President recently signed an Executive Order creating a bipartisan, 16-member, commission to study and report back this fall with specific recommendations to preserve Social Security for seniors while building wealth for younger Americans.

- The commission will be co-chaired by former Senator Daniel Patrick Moynihan (D-NY), and Dick Parsons (Co-Chief Operating Officer of AOL/Time Warner). The commission will make recommendations to modernize and restore fiscal soundness to Social Security, using six key principles developed by the President as a roadmap:

- Modernization must not change Social Security benefits for retirees or near-retirees.
- The entire Social Security surplus must be dedicated to Social Security only.
- Social Security payroll taxes must not be increased.
- Government must not invest Social Security funds in the stock market.
- Modernization must preserve Social Security's disability and survivors components.
- Modernization must include individually controlled, voluntary personal retirement accounts, which will augment the Social Security safety net.

➢ President Bush is tackling a tough issue that affects all generations. For several years, despite warnings of Social Security's insolvency from the Social Security Trustees, the federal government has failed to take the actions necessary to strengthen the Social Security program.

➢ The creation of the Social Security Commission is a fulfillment of the President's pledge of a bipartisan process to develop real solutions, and to end a culture of stalemate. The President is doing in office what he said he would do.

The President's Bipartisan Social Security Commission Holds Organizational Meeting

Action:

- Today the President's Commission to Strengthen Social Security will hold its initial organizational meeting. This meeting, and all other meetings of the full commission, are open to citizens and the media. The President thinks it is important to hear the views of all Americans and to give them complete access to the Commission's deliberations and activities.

Why is it Important to Strengthen Social Security?

- According to the most recent report of the Social Security Trustees, by 2016, Social Security payroll taxes would no longer be sufficient to pay full promised benefits. This means that starting in 2016, the Social Security system will not generate enough cash on hand to pay promised benefits. In the absence of reform, either taxes will have to be increased, benefits or other spending cut, or public debt increased.

- Real rates of return for today's young workers are expected to be only around 2%, well below the level for earlier generations. Real rates of return for future generations would decline further if solvency is attained solely by increasing taxes or reducing benefits -- an outcome that President Bush is determined to prevent.

- Social Security currently requires that participants contribute tax dollars to earn benefits that are determined wholly by the political process. Participants have no ownership of any portion of their accrued benefits, and cannot pass them on to their children.

- Strengthening Social Security will protect the benefits of current seniors and those near to retirement by making the system solvent and sound. Bipartisan reform will also help ensure that future generations of seniors have had an opportunity to maximize their retirement dollars.

The President's Bipartisan Commission on Social Security:

- President Bush has demonstrated his commitment to tackle tough problems by stepping forward to provide much-needed leadership in the area of Social Security.

- The President recently signed an Executive Order creating a bipartisan, 16-member, commission to study and report back this fall with specific recommendations to preserve Social Security for seniors while building wealth for younger Americans.

- The commission will be co-chaired by former Senator Daniel Patrick Moynihan (D-NY), and Dick Parsons (Co-Chief Operating Officer of AOL/Time Warner). The commission will make recommendations to modernize and restore fiscal soundness to Social Security, using six key principles developed by the President as a roadmap:

- Modernization must not change Social Security benefits for retirees or near-retirees.
- The entire Social Security surplus must be dedicated to Social Security only.
- Social Security payroll taxes must not be increased.
- Government must not invest Social Security funds in the stock market.
- Modernization must preserve Social Security's disability and survivors components.
- Modernization must include individually controlled, voluntary personal retirement accounts, which will augment the Social Security safety net.

➢ President Bush is tackling a tough issue that affects all generations. For several years, despite warnings of Social Security's insolvency from the Social Security Trustees, the federal government has failed to take the actions necessary to strengthen the Social Security program.

➢ The creation of the Social Security Commission is a fulfillment of the President's pledge of a bipartisan process to develop real solutions, and to end a culture of stalemate. The President is doing in office what he said he would do.

The President's Bipartisan Social Security Commission Holds Organizational Meeting

Action:

- Today the President's Commission to Strengthen Social Security will hold its initial organizational meeting. This meeting, and all other meetings of the full commission, are open to citizens and the media. The President thinks it is important to hear the views of all Americans and to give them complete access to the Commission's deliberations and activities.

Why is it Important to Strengthen Social Security?

- According to the most recent report of the Social Security Trustees, by 2016, Social Security payroll taxes would no longer be sufficient to pay full promised benefits. This means that starting in 2016, the Social Security system will not generate enough cash on hand to pay promised benefits. In the absence of reform, either taxes will have to be increased, benefits or other spending cut, or public debt increased.

- Real rates of return for today's young workers are expected to be only around 2%, well below the level for earlier generations. Real rates of return for future generations would decline further if solvency is attained solely by increasing taxes or reducing benefits -- an outcome that President Bush is determined to prevent.

- Social Security currently requires that participants contribute tax dollars to earn benefits that are determined wholly by the political process. Participants have no ownership of any portion of their accrued benefits, and cannot pass them on to their children.

- Strengthening Social Security will protect the benefits of current seniors and those near to retirement by making the system solvent and sound. Bipartisan reform will also help ensure that future generations of seniors have had an opportunity to maximize their retirement dollars.

The President's Bipartisan Commission on Social Security:

- President Bush has demonstrated his commitment to tackle tough problems by stepping forward to provide much-needed leadership in the area of Social Security.

- The President recently signed an Executive Order creating a bipartisan, 16-member, commission to study and report back this fall with specific recommendations to preserve Social Security for seniors while building wealth for younger Americans.

- The commission will be co-chaired by former Senator Daniel Patrick Moynihan (D-NY), and Dick Parsons (Co-Chief Operating Officer of AOL/Time Warner). The commission will make recommendations to modernize and restore fiscal soundness to Social Security, using six key principles developed by the President as a roadmap:

- Modernization must not change Social Security benefits for retirees or near-retirees.
- The entire Social Security surplus must be dedicated to Social Security only.
- Social Security payroll taxes must not be increased.
- Government must not invest Social Security funds in the stock market.
- Modernization must preserve Social Security's disability and survivors components.
- Modernization must include individually controlled, voluntary personal retirement accounts, which will augment the Social Security safety net.

➢ President Bush is tackling a tough issue that affects all generations. For several years, despite warnings of Social Security's insolvency from the Social Security Trustees, the federal government has failed to take the actions necessary to strengthen the Social Security program.

➢ The creation of the Social Security Commission is a fulfillment of the President's pledge of a bipartisan process to develop real solutions, and to end a culture of stalemate. The President is doing in office what he said he would do.

The President's Bipartisan Social Security Commission Holds Organizational Meeting

Action:

- Today the President's Commission to Strengthen Social Security will hold its initial organizational meeting. This meeting, and all other meetings of the full commission, are open to citizens and the media. The President thinks it is important to hear the views of all Americans and to give them complete access to the Commission's deliberations and activities.

Why is it Important to Strengthen Social Security?

- According to the most recent report of the Social Security Trustees, by 2016, Social Security payroll taxes would no longer be sufficient to pay full promised benefits. This means that starting in 2016, the Social Security system will not generate enough cash on hand to pay promised benefits. In the absence of reform, either taxes will have to be increased, benefits or other spending cut, or public debt increased.

- Real rates of return for today's young workers are expected to be only around 2%, well below the level for earlier generations. Real rates of return for future generations would decline further if solvency is attained solely by increasing taxes or reducing benefits -- an outcome that President Bush is determined to prevent.

- Social Security currently requires that participants contribute tax dollars to earn benefits that are determined wholly by the political process. Participants have no ownership of any portion of their accrued benefits, and cannot pass them on to their children.

- Strengthening Social Security will protect the benefits of current seniors and those near to retirement by making the system solvent and sound. Bipartisan reform will also help ensure that future generations of seniors have had an opportunity to maximize their retirement dollars.

The President's Bipartisan Commission on Social Security:

- President Bush has demonstrated his commitment to tackle tough problems by stepping forward to provide much-needed leadership in the area of Social Security.

- The President recently signed an Executive Order creating a bipartisan, 16-member, commission to study and report back this fall with specific recommendations to preserve Social Security for seniors while building wealth for younger Americans.

- The commission will be co-chaired by former Senator Daniel Patrick Moynihan (D-NY), and Dick Parsons (Co-Chief Operating Officer of AOL/Time Warner). The commission will make recommendations to modernize and restore fiscal soundness to Social Security, using six key principles developed by the President as a roadmap:

- Modernization must not change Social Security benefits for retirees or near-retirees.
- The entire Social Security surplus must be dedicated to Social Security only.
- Social Security payroll taxes must not be increased.
- Government must not invest Social Security funds in the stock market.
- Modernization must preserve Social Security's disability and survivors components.
- Modernization must include individually controlled, voluntary personal retirement accounts, which will augment the Social Security safety net.

➢ President Bush is tackling a tough issue that affects all generations. For several years, despite warnings of Social Security's insolvency from the Social Security Trustees, the federal government has failed to take the actions necessary to strengthen the Social Security program.

➢ The creation of the Social Security Commission is a fulfillment of the President's pledge of a bipartisan process to develop real solutions, and to end a culture of stalemate. The President is doing in office what he said he would do.

The President's Bipartisan Social Security Commission Holds Organizational Meeting

Action:

- Today the President's Commission to Strengthen Social Security will hold its initial organizational meeting. This meeting, and all other meetings of the full commission, are open to citizens and the media. The President thinks it is important to hear the views of all Americans and to give them complete access to the Commission's deliberations and activities.

Why is it Important to Strengthen Social Security?

- According to the most recent report of the Social Security Trustees, by 2016, Social Security payroll taxes would no longer be sufficient to pay full promised benefits. This means that starting in 2016, the Social Security system will not generate enough cash on hand to pay promised benefits. In the absence of reform, either taxes will have to be increased, benefits or other spending cut, or public debt increased.

- Real rates of return for today's young workers are expected to be only around 2%, well below the level for earlier generations. Real rates of return for future generations would decline further if solvency is attained solely by increasing taxes or reducing benefits -- an outcome that President Bush is determined to prevent.

- Social Security currently requires that participants contribute tax dollars to earn benefits that are determined wholly by the political process. Participants have no ownership of any portion of their accrued benefits, and cannot pass them on to their children.

- Strengthening Social Security will protect the benefits of current seniors and those near to retirement by making the system solvent and sound. Bipartisan reform will also help ensure that future generations of seniors have had an opportunity to maximize their retirement dollars.

The President's Bipartisan Commission on Social Security:

- President Bush has demonstrated his commitment to tackle tough problems by stepping forward to provide much-needed leadership in the area of Social Security.

- The President recently signed an Executive Order creating a bipartisan, 16-member, commission to study and report back this fall with specific recommendations to preserve Social Security for seniors while building wealth for younger Americans.

- The commission will be co-chaired by former Senator Daniel Patrick Moynihan (D-NY), and Dick Parsons (Co-Chief Operating Officer of AOL/Time Warner). The commission will make recommendations to modernize and restore fiscal soundness to Social Security, using six key principles developed by the President as a roadmap:

- Modernization must not change Social Security benefits for retirees or near-retirees.
- The entire Social Security surplus must be dedicated to Social Security only.
- Social Security payroll taxes must not be increased.
- Government must not invest Social Security funds in the stock market.
- Modernization must preserve Social Security's disability and survivors components.
- Modernization must include individually controlled, voluntary personal retirement accounts, which will augment the Social Security safety net.

➢ President Bush is tackling a tough issue that affects all generations. For several years, despite warnings of Social Security's insolvency from the Social Security Trustees, the federal government has failed to take the actions necessary to strengthen the Social Security program.

➢ The creation of the Social Security Commission is a fulfillment of the President's pledge of a bipartisan process to develop real solutions, and to end a culture of stalemate. The President is doing in office what he said he would do.

Scientists' Report Doesn't
Support the Kyoto Treaty

By Richard S. Lindzen. Mr. Lindzen, a professor of meteorology at MIT, was a member of the National Academy of Sciences panel on climate change.

Last week the National Academy of Sciences released a report on climate change, prepared in response to a request from the White House, that was depicted in the press as an implicit endorsement of the Kyoto Protocol. CNN's Michelle Mitchell was typical of the coverage when she declared that the report represented "a unanimous decision that global warming is real, is getting worse, and is due to man. There is no wiggle room."

As one of 11 scientists who prepared the report, I can state that this is simply untrue. For starters, the NAS never asks that all participants agree to all elements of a report, but rather that the report represent the span of views. This the full report did, making clear that there is no consensus, unanimous or otherwise, about long-term climate trends and what causes them.

As usual, far too much public attention was paid to the hastily prepared summary rather than to the body of the report. The summary began with a zinger -- that greenhouse gases are accumulating in Earth's atmosphere as a result of human activities, causing surface air temperatures and subsurface ocean temperatures to rise, etc., before following with the necessary qualifications. For example, the full text noted that 20 years was too short a period for estimating long-term trends, but the summary forgot to mention this.

Our primary conclusion was that despite some knowledge and agreement, the science is by no means settled. We are quite confident (1) that global mean temperature is about 0.5 degrees Celsius higher than it was a century ago; (2) that atmospheric levels of carbon dioxide have risen over the past two centuries; and (3) that carbon dioxide is a greenhouse gas whose increase is likely to warm the earth (one of many, the most important being water vapor and clouds).

But -- and I cannot stress this enough -- we are not in a position to confidently attribute past climate change to carbon dioxide or to forecast what the climate will be in the future. That is to say, contrary to media impressions, agreement with the three basic statements tells us almost nothing relevant to policy discussions.

One reason for this uncertainty is that, as the report states, the climate is always changing; change is the norm. Two centuries ago, much of the Northern Hemisphere was emerging from a little ice age. A millennium ago, during the Middle Ages, the same region was in a warm period. Thirty years ago, we were concerned with global cooling.

Distinguishing the small recent changes in global mean temperature from the natural variability, which is unknown, is not a trivial task. All attempts so far make the assumption that existing computer climate models simulate natural variability, but I doubt that anyone really believes this assumption.

We simply do not know what relation, if any, exists between global climate changes and water vapor, clouds, storms, hurricanes, and other factors, including regional climate changes, which are generally much larger than global changes and not correlated with them. Nor do we know how to predict changes in greenhouse gases. This is because we cannot forecast economic and technological change over the next century, and also because there are many man-made substances whose properties and levels are not well known, but which could be comparable in importance to carbon dioxide.

What we do is know that a doubling of carbon dioxide by itself would produce only a modest temperature increase of one degree Celsius. Larger projected increases depend on "amplification" of the carbon dioxide by more important, but poorly modeled, greenhouse gases, clouds and water vapor.

The press has frequently tied the existence of climate change to a need for Kyoto. The NAS panel did not address this question. My own view, consistent with the panel's work, is that the Kyoto Protocol would not result in a substantial reduction in global warming. Given the difficulties in significantly limiting levels of atmospheric carbon dioxide, a more effective policy might well focus on other greenhouse substances whose potential for reducing global warming in a short time may be greater.

The panel was finally asked to evaluate the work of the United Nations' Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, focusing on the Summary for Policymakers, the only part ever read or quoted. The Summary for Policymakers, which is seen as endorsing Kyoto, is commonly presented as the consensus of thousands of the world's foremost climate scientists. Within the confines of professional courtesy, the NAS panel essentially concluded that the IPCC's Summary for Policymakers does not provide suitable guidance for the U.S. government.

The full IPCC report is an admirable description of research activities in climate science, but it is not specifically directed at policy. The Summary for Policymakers is, but it is also a very different document. It represents a consensus of government representatives (many of whom are also their nations' Kyoto representatives), rather than of scientists. The resulting document has a strong tendency to disguise uncertainty, and conjures up some scary scenarios for which there is no evidence.

Science, in the public arena, is commonly used as a source of authority with which to bludgeon political opponents and propagandize uninformed citizens. This is what has been done with both the reports of the IPCC and the NAS. It is a reprehensible practice that corrodes our ability to make rational decisions. A fairer view of the science will show that there is still a vast amount of uncertainty -- far more than advocates of Kyoto would like to acknowledge -- and that the NAS report has hardly ended the debate. Nor was it meant to.

Introduction

Three months ago, the President directed a Cabinet-level review of U.S. climate change policy. Members of the Cabinet, the Vice President, and senior White House staff have been meeting to examine the science, technologies, current U.S. efforts, and a wide range of innovative options for addressing concentrations of greenhouse gases in the atmosphere.

During that time, the Cabinet-level climate change working group has held regular and intensive sessions and has heard from many experts representing a wide range of views. To obtain the most recent information and a balanced view of what we know and do not know about the science of climate change, the working group requested a report from the National Academy of Sciences. The report outlines areas supported by the science and significant gaps in our knowledge of climate change.

The following material contains the initial findings of the working group: summaries of current U.S. actions, an analysis of the Kyoto Protocol, and proposals to advance the science, advance technologies, and create partnerships in the Western Hemisphere and throughout the world to address climate change.

The President has directed the Cabinet-level climate change working group to press forward and develop innovative approaches in accordance with several basic principles. These approaches should: (1) be consistent with the long-term goal of stabilizing greenhouse gas concentrations in the atmosphere; (2) be measured, as we learn more from science and build on it; (3) be flexible to adjust to new information and take advantage of new technology; (4) ensure continued economic growth and prosperity; (5) pursue market-based incentives and spur technological innovation; and (6) be based on global participation, including developing countries.

The Cabinet-level climate change working group will continue its review consistent with these principles.

CURRENT U.S. ACTIONS TO ADDRESS CLIMATE CHANGE

"The earth's well-being is also an issue important to America – and it's an issue that should be important to every nation and in every part of the world. My Administration is committed to a leadership role on the issue of climate change. We recognize our responsibility and we will meet it, at home, in our hemisphere, and in the world."

--President George W. Bush

Executive Summary

The United States government is currently pursuing a broad range of strategies to reduce emissions of greenhouse gases in the major greenhouse gas emitting sectors of our economy:

- Electricity -- Federal programs promote greenhouse gas reductions through the development of cleaner, more efficient technologies for electricity generation and transmission. The government is also supporting the development of renewable resources, such as solar energy, wind power, geothermal energy, hydropower, bio-energy, and hydrogen.
- Transportation -- The United States is currently promoting the development of fuel-efficient motor vehicles and trucks, researching options for producing cleaner fuels, and implementing programs to reduce the number of vehicle miles traveled.
- Industry -- The United States is implementing many partnership programs with industry to reduce emissions of carbon dioxide (CO_2) and other greenhouse gases, to promote source reduction and recycling, and to increase the use of combined heat and power.
- Buildings -- Federal voluntary partnership programs promote energy efficiency in the nation's commercial, residential, and government buildings (including schools) by offering technical assistance as well as the labeling of efficient products, efficient new homes, and efficient office buildings.
- Agriculture and Forestry -- The Federal government is implementing conservation programs that have the benefit of sequestering carbon in soils and off-setting agricultural emissions of greenhouse gases.
- The Federal Government – The Federal Government has taken steps to reduce greenhouse gas emissions from energy use in Federal buildings and in the Federal transportation fleet.
- The National Energy Policy – The National Energy Policy includes new recommendations to promote energy efficiency, conservation, increased use of natural gas and renewable energy, and the new construction of nuclear capacity.

United States government climate change programs are achieving real results, helping to reduce greenhouse gas emissions by 66 million metric tons of carbon equivalent in 2000. United States carbon intensity – the amount of CO2 emitted per unit of GDP – declined 15% from 1990 to 1999.

In addition, businesses, state and local governments, and non-governmental organizations are addressing global climate change – by improving the measurement and reporting of greenhouse gas emission reductions; through voluntary reductions, including emissions trading; and actions to sequester carbon through tree planting and forest preservation, restoration and management.

The Federal Government

The U.S. government is currently pursuing a broad range of strategies to reduce emissions of greenhouse gases, including:

- Voluntary public-private partnership programs that promote energy efficiency and the broader use of renewable energy;
- Research and development (R&D) investments and tax incentives to increase energy efficiency and the broader use of renewable energy;
- Appliance standards that increase the minimum level of efficiency of products on the market;
- Financial incentives such as grants to states and localities; and
- Programs to reduce greenhouse gas emissions from Federal buildings and transportation fleets.

These programs are achieving real reductions in greenhouse gas emissions – the U.S. government estimates that its existing climate change programs reduced emissions by 66 million metric tons of carbon equivalent (MMTCE) in 2000[1], approximately 2.7% of total emissions. The amount of CO2 emitted per unit of GDP declined 15% from 1990 to 1999.[2]

The following sections highlight illustrative programs in the major greenhouse gas emitting sectors of the economy: the electric power industry (32% of total U.S. greenhouse gas emissions); transportation (27%); other industry (21%); residential and commercial buildings (13%); and agriculture and forestry (net 7%) (unlike other sectors of the economy, agricultural and forestry activities can actively remove carbon dioxide from the atmosphere).[3]

Electricity

Federal programs promote greenhouse gas reductions through the development of cleaner, more efficient technologies for electricity generation and transmission. For example, the Environmental Protection Agency/Department of Energy Combined Heat and Power Challenge program has the goal of doubling U.S. combined heat and power capacity by 2010 by providing technical assistance and addressing regulatory issues where possible.

The Federal government is also supporting renewable resources such as solar energy, wind power, geothermal energy, hydropower, bio-energy, and hydrogen. For example, the Department of Energy supports the development of a wide range of solar and renewable energy technology, seeking to improve their reliability, expand their applicability, and reduce their costs. These activities have been very successful in bringing down technology costs. The cost of producing photo-voltaic modules has decreased 50 percent since 1991, and the cost of wind power has decreased 85 percent since 1980. Commercial success has been achieved for both of these areas in certain applications.

Transportation

The U.S. is currently promoting the development of fuel-efficient motor vehicles and trucks, researching options for producing cleaner fuels, and implementing programs to reduce the number of vehicle miles traveled. For example, through the Partnership for a New Generation of Vehicles (PNGV) program, the research has directly led to the commercial introduction of new hybrid vehicles and soon hydrogen as well. Commercialization of such vehicles could cut fuel use and carbon emissions for individual vehicles significantly and could lay the foundation for large, long-term fuel and carbon benefits. If 10% of the on-road vehicle fleet utilized PNGV technologies, the aggregate emission reductions could be approximately 20 million metric tons of carbon equivalent per year. The program is being extended to sport utility vehicles and other light trucks which, because of their lower baseline fuel economies, have the potential for even greater overall fuel and carbon savings per vehicle.

Industry

The U.S. government is implementing many partnership programs with industry to reduce emissions of carbon dioxide (CO_2) and other greenhouse gases, to promote source reduction and recycling, and to increase the use of combined heat and power. For example, current voluntary partnerships directed toward eliminating market barriers to the profitable collection and use of methane that otherwise would be released to the atmosphere are expected to hold methane emissions at or below 1990 levels through 2010. Since the launch of EPA's Voluntary Aluminum Industrial Partnership in 1995, the program's membership has grown to include 22 of the nation's 23 aluminum smelters, representing 94% of U.S. production capacity. As of 2000, program partners cumulatively achieved a 45% reduction in perfluorocarbon (a high global warming potential gas) emissions from 1990 levels.[4]

Commercial and Residential Buildings

Partnership programs promote energy efficiency in the nation's commercial, residential, and government buildings (including schools) by offering technical assistance as well as the labeling of efficient products, efficient new homes, and efficient office buildings. As one example, the

[4] The Power of Partnerships: Energy Star and Other Voluntary Programs, 2000 Annual Report of the Climate Protection Partnerships Division, U.S. EPA, Summer 2001.

EPA/DOE Energy Star program collaborates with a wide range of building owners and users -- retailers, real estate investors, small businesses, governments and schools. Each partner commits to improve the energy performance of its facilities and the most efficient buildings are awarded the Energy Star label. More than 16% of the U.S. commercial, public, and industrial building market is enrolled in Energy Star. Nationwide, Energy Star has eliminated the need for over 10,000 megawatts of peak generating capacity – equivalent to 20 large (50 MW) power plants.[5]

Agriculture and Forestry

The Federal government is conducting research into methods to reduce emissions of methane and nitrous oxide from agriculture, and is implementing conservation programs that have the benefit of sequestering carbon in soils and forests. For example, USDA's Conservation Reserve Program (CRP) has taken over 36 million acres of environmentally sensitive crop land out of production. CRP provides long-term environmental benefits, including the offset of up to 12 MMTCE each year.[6]

The Federal Government

The Federal Government has taken steps to reduce greenhouse gas emissions from energy use in Federal buildings and in the Federal transportation fleet by:

- Requiring all Federal agencies to take steps to cut greenhouse gas emissions from energy use in buildings by 30% below 1990 levels by 2010.
- Directing Federal agencies in Washington, D.C. to offer to their employees up to $65 per month in transit and van pool benefits.
- Requiring Federal agencies to implement strategies to reduce their fleet's annual petroleum consumption by 20% relative to 1999 consumption levels and to use alternative fuels a majority of the time.

Businesses, States and Communities, and Non-Governmental Organizations

Businesses, states and local governments, and non-governmental organizations are also moving forward to address global climate change -- through programs to improve the measurement and reporting of emission reductions; through voluntary programs, including emissions trading programs; and through sequestration programs. For example:

- Under the Voluntary Reporting of Greenhouse Gases program, provided by Section 1605(b) of the Energy Policy Act of 1992, more than 200 companies voluntarily reported to the Department of Energy their voluntary measures to reduce, avoid or sequester greenhouse gas emissions, principally carbon dioxide.[7] These companies undertook 1,715 projects and achieved greenhouse gas emission reductions and carbon sequestration equivalent to 61.5 MMTCE, or about 3.4 percent of 1999 total U.S. greenhouse gas emissions.[8]

- Electric Utilities: Several companies have committed to reducing greenhouse gas emissions. Measures include:

  - ✓ Improved generation efficiency (seasonal use of natural gas, hydroelectric turbine replacements, expanded capacity, shortened outage schedules at nuclear plants);
  - ✓ Improved pipeline, transmission and distribution equipment efficiencies (including reducing leaks);
  - ✓ Increased use of renewables (wind, biomass and solar);
  - ✓ Improved home and office energy efficiencies (low-income weatherization, home energy audits, inefficient refrigerator and freezer removal and recycling, installation of advanced energy management systems, planting trees, and retrofitting energy efficient lighting in company buildings); and
  - ✓ Investments in more efficient technologies (programs to install geothermal heat pumps, commercialize emerging energy efficient and renewable energy technologies, accelerate introduction of electric vehicles into the marketplace, and enhance carbon sequestration).

- Oil and Gas: Some oil and gas companies have added greenhouse gas reductions to their list of corporate priorities. One company intends to reduce its greenhouse gases by 10% by 2002 (over 1990 levels), and another company is seeking to reduce by 10% by 2010. To do this, the company is adopting an internal system of company-wide emissions trading to meet its goal in the most cost-effective way possible. Significant gains can be made from such measures as reducing flaring and leaking.

- Auto Manufacturers: Auto manufacturers have announced production plans for hybrid gas and electric vehicles in 2003 or 2004 and have pledged to increase their sport utility vehicles' fuel economy by 25% by 2005.

- Chemicals: A chemicals trade association supports voluntary programs and its members' actions to improve energy efficiency and reduce greenhouse gases. For example, one company says it will reduce its greenhouse gas emissions by 65% (by 2010, over 1990 levels). It already has cut its global emissions by 45% by making major process-change investments (reducing nitrous oxides), by holding energy consumption flat even with tremendous production growth (with powerhouse and process efficiencies), and increased use of renewable energy. Another company is working to reduce energy use by 20% per unit of production by 2005.

- Non-Governmental Organizations. Several non-governmental organizations and coalitions have initiated partnership programs with large global corporations to reduce emissions of greenhouse gases, and promote the use of energy conservation, renewable energy sources, and efficient technologies. Non-governmental organizations also are working with companies to support forestry projects that sequester carbon through tree planting and forest preservation, restoration and management.

- States. More than 25 states have initiated state-based action plans to reduce greenhouse gas emissions. Some states are using market-based mechanisms to achieve reductions. For example, the State of New Jersey has established a 3.5% statewide reduction goal and is developing voluntary agreements with various businesses.

The National Energy Policy

The National Energy Policy includes numerous recommendations to promote energy efficiency and conservation and to reduce emissions of greenhouse gases through the use of alternative, renewable, and cleaner forms of energy.[9] These recommendations include:

Efficiency and Conservation Measures

- Tax incentives and other initiatives to promote the use of combined heat and power.

  The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of the Treasury to work with Congress to encourage increased energy efficiency through combined heat and power (CHP) projects by shortening the depreciation life for CHP projects or providing an investment tax credit.

  The NEPD Group also recommended that the President direct the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) to work with local and state governments to promote the use of well-designed CHP and other clean power generation at brownfields sites, consistent with the local communities' interests. EPA will also work to clarify liability issues if they are raised at a particular site.

  The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the EPA Administrator to promote CHP through flexibility in environmental permitting.

- Reviewing and providing recommendations on establishing CAFE standards as well as other market-based approaches to increase the national average fuel economy of new motor vehicles.

  The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of Transportation to:

  - ✓ Review and provide recommendations on establishing Corporate Average Fuel Economy (CAFE) standards with due consideration of the National Academy of Sciences study to be released in July 2001. Responsibly crafted CAFE standards should increase efficiency without negatively impacting the U.S. automotive industry. The determination of future fuel economy standards must therefore be addressed analytically and based on sound science.

[9] National Energy Policy: Report of the National Energy Policy Development Group, May 2001.

- ✓ Consider passenger safety, economic concerns, and disparate impact on the U.S. versus foreign fleets of automobiles.
- ✓ Look at other market-based approaches to increasing the national average fuel economy of new motor vehicles.

➢ Directing all agencies to use technological advances to better protect our environment.

The Administration remains committed to investing in Intelligent Transportation Systems (ITS) and encourages the private sector to invest in ITS applications. This Department of Transportation (DOT) program funds the development of improved transportation infrastructure that will reduce congestion, such as traveler information/navigation systems, freeway management, and electronic toll collection. ITS applications reduce fuel associated with travel.

The Administration remains committed to the DOT's fuel-cell-powered transit bus program, authored by the Transportation Equity Act for the 21st Century (TEA-21). This program demonstrates the viability of fuel-cell power plants for transit bus applications.

The Administration remains committed to the Clean Buses program. TEA-21 establishes a new clean fuel formula grant program, which provides an opportunity to accelerate the introduction of advanced bus propulsion technologies into the mainstream of the nation's transit fleet.

➢ Promoting energy efficiency, including expanding the Energy Star program.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of Energy to conduct a review of current funding and historic performance of energy efficiency research and development programs in light of the recommendations of this report. In addition, the NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Office of Science and Technology Policy and the President's Council of Advisors on Science and Technology to review and make recommendations on using the nation's energy resources more efficiently.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of Energy to promote greater energy efficiency:

- ✓ Expand the Energy Star program beyond office buildings to include schools, retail buildings, health care facilities, and homes.
- ✓ Extend the Energy Star labeling program to additional products, appliances, and services.
- ✓ Strengthen Department of Energy public education programs relating to energy efficiency.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the EPA Administrator to develop and implement a strategy to increase public awareness of the sizable savings that energy efficiency offers to homeowners across the country.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of Energy to establish a national priority for improving energy efficiency. The priority would be to improve the energy intensity of the U.S. economy as measured by the amount of energy required for each dollar of economic productivity. This increased efficiency should be pursued through the combined efforts of industry, consumers, and federal, state, and local governments.

- Conserving energy at federal facilities.

  The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct heads of executive departments and agencies to take appropriate actions to conserve energy use at their facilities to the maximum extent consistent with the effective discharge of public responsibilities.

- Improving and expanding appliance standards.

  The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of Energy to improve the energy efficiency of appliances:

  - ✓ Support the appliance standards program for covered products, setting higher standards where technologically feasible and economically justified.
  - ✓ Expand the scope of the appliance standards program, setting standards for additional appliances where technologically feasible and economically justified.

- Promoting congestion mitigation technologies.

  The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of Transportation to review and promote congestion mitigation technologies and strategies and work with Congress on legislation to implement these strategies.

- Reducing demand for transportation fuels by establishing a ground freight management program.

  The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the EPA and DOT to develop ways to reduce demand for petroleum transportation fuels. These agencies will work with the trucking industry to establish a program to reduce emissions and fuel consumption from long-haul trucks at truck stops by implementing alternatives to idling, such as electrification and auxiliary power units at truck stops along interstate highways. EPA and DOT will develop partnership agreements with trucking fleets, truck stops, and manufacturers of idle-reducing technologies (e.g., portable auxiliary packs, electrification) to install and use low-emission-idling technologies.

Alternative, Renewable, and Clean Forms of Energy

- Increasing America's use of renewable and alternative energy

  The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretaries of the Interior and Energy to re-evaluate access limitations to federal lands in order to increase renewable energy production, such as biomass, wind, geothermal, and solar.

The NEPD Group supported the increase of $39.2 million in the FY 2002 budget amendment for the Department of Energy's Energy Supply account that would provide increased support for research and development of renewable energy resources.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of Energy to conduct a review of current funding and historic performance of renewable energy and alternative energy research and development programs. Based on this review, the Secretary of Energy is then directed to propose appropriate funding of those research and development programs that are performance-based and are modeled as public-private partnerships.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of the Treasury to work with Congress to develop legislation to provide for a temporary income tax credit available for the purchase of new hybrid or fuel-cell vehicles between 2002 and 2007.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of the Treasury to work with Congress on legislation to expand the section 29 tax credit to make it available for new landfill methane projects. The credit could be tiered, depending on whether a landfill is already required by federal law to collect and flare its methane emissions due to local air pollution concerns.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of the Interior to determine ways to reduce the delays in geothermal lease processing as part of the permitting review process.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of the Treasury to work with Congress on legislation to extend and expand tax credits for electricity produced using wind and biomass. The President's budget request extends the present 1.7 cents per kilowatt hour tax credit for electricity produced from wind and biomass; expands eligible biomass sources to include forest-related sources, agricultural sources, and certain urban sources; and allows a credit for electricity produced from biomass co-fired with coal.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of the Treasury to work with Congress on legislation to provide a new 15 percent tax credit for residential solar energy property, up to a maximum credit of $2,000.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of the Treasury to work with Congress to continue the ethanol excise tax exemption.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of Energy to develop next-generation technology—including hydrogen and fusion:

- ✓ Develop an education campaign that communicates the benefits of alternative forms of energy, including hydrogen and fusion.

- ✓ Focus research and development efforts on integrating current programs regarding hydrogen, fuel cells, and distributed energy.
- ✓ Support legislation reauthorizing the Hydrogen Energy Act.

➢ Promoting new construction of nuclear capacity that could significantly reduce future greenhouse gas emissions.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President support the expansion of nuclear energy in the United States as a major component of our national energy policy. Following are specific components of the recommendation:

- ✓ Encourage the Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC) to ensure that safety and environmental protection are high priorities as they prepare to evaluate and expedite applications for licensing new advanced-technology nuclear reactors.
- ✓ Encourage the NRC to facilitate efforts by utilities to expand nuclear energy generation in the United States by uprating existing nuclear plants safely.
- ✓ Encourage the NRC to relicense existing nuclear plants that meet or exceed safety standards.
- ✓ Direct the Secretary of Energy and the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency to assess the potential of nuclear energy to improve air quality.
- ✓ Increase resources as necessary for nuclear safety enforcement in light of the potential increase in generation.
- ✓ Use the best science to provide a deep geologic repository for nuclear waste.
- ✓ Support legislation clarifying that qualified funds set aside by plant owners for eventual decommissioning will not be taxed as part of the transaction.
- ✓ Support legislation to extend the Price–Anderson Act.

➢ Market-based three pollutant strategy

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the EPA Administrator to work with Congress to propose legislation that would establish a flexible, market-based program to significantly reduce and cap emissions of sulfur dioxide, nitrogen oxides, and mercury from electric power generators. Such a program (with appropriate measures to address local concerns) would provide significant public health benefits, including ancillary carbon benefits, even as we increase electricity supplies.

- ✓ Establish mandatory reduction targets for emissions of three main pollutants: sulfur dioxide, nitrogen oxides, and mercury.
- ✓ Phase in reductions over a reasonable period of time, similar to the successful acid rain reduction program established by the 1990 amendments to the Clean Air Act.
- ✓ Provide regulatory certainty to allow utilities to make modifications to their plants without fear of new litigation.

- ✓ Provide market-based incentives, such as emissions trading credits to help achieve the required reductions.

- Increasing research in clean coal technologies.

  The NEPD recommended that the President direct the Department of Energy to continue to develop advanced clean coal technology:

  - ✓ Investing $2 billion over 10 years to fund research in clean coal technologies.
  - ✓ Supporting a permanent extension of the existing research and development tax credit.
  - ✓ Directing federal agencies to explore regulatory approaches that will encourage advancements in environmental technology.

An Analysis of the Kyoto Protocol

"The Kyoto Protocol was fatally flawed in fundamental ways. But the process used to bring nations together to discuss our joint response to climate change is an important one."

– President George W. Bush

The Kyoto Protocol is fundamentally flawed. The Kyoto Protocol fails to establish a long-term goal based on science, poses serious and unnecessary risks to the U.S. and world economies, and is ineffective in addressing climate change because it excludes major parts of the world.

The Kyoto Protocol is ineffective in addressing climate change because it excludes developing countries. The Kyoto Protocol's emission reduction requirements apply only to industrialized countries. Developing countries can continue business as usual under the Kyoto Protocol, despite their rapidly growing emissions:

- Current data indicate that developing countries' net emissions (including emissions and uptake from land use activities) have already exceeded those of the developed world.[10]

- Moreover, annual developing country emissions of CO_2 will double between 1990 and 2010 – an increase that represents over twice as many tons as all of the reductions the United States would be required to take under the Kyoto Protocol.[11]

The Kyoto Protocol's targets are not based on science. Its targets and timetables were arrived at arbitrarily as a result of political negotiations, and are not related to any specific scientific information or long-term objective.

The Kyoto Protocol targets are precipitous. Under the Kyoto Protocol, the emission reduction target for the United States is 7% from 1990 levels for each year from 2008-2012. However, the figure of 7% is misleading, because it does not take into account growth in emissions between 1990 and 2012. The actual reduction from the U.S. current emissions trajectory for this period is over 30%.[12] In other words, meeting its target would require the United States to reduce its output of greenhouse emissions by one third in less than seven years. This would require U.S. firms to retire large amounts of capital stock prematurely, imposing substantial and unnecessary costs on the U.S. economy. The Kyoto Protocol also does not allow countries to count legitimate mitigation activities. In fact, it restricts the use of carbon sequestration as a means of achieving its objectives. Moreover, it does not address substances that impact climate change, such as black carbon and tropospheric ozone, reductions of which would also have significant health benefits.

[12] United States submission to the UNFCCC, 2001

The Kyoto Protocol risks significantly harming the U.S. and global economies. The Kyoto Protocol would require the United States to meet its target no matter what the cost, which could be substantial:

- Most models suggest a reduction in U.S. GDP of 1% to 2% by 2010 as a result of Kyoto without emissions trading.[13] A 2% reduction is comparable to the impact of the oil shock of the 1970s.

- A U.S. Department of Energy model suggests a reduction of as much as 4%[14] in GDP under a scenario in which the United States does not establish implementing regulations before 2005 and does not engage in emissions trading. Under such a scenario, the U.S. economy could be transformed from one of strong growth to recession, with potentially significant repercussions for the global economy.

Other major industrial countries also have very stringent targets. The difficulties many countries will have in meeting their targets raises serious questions about the viability of the Kyoto Protocol framework.

The Kyoto Protocol would leave the United States dangerously dependent on other countries to meet its emission targets. Under the Kyoto Protocol's emissions trading system, countries are allowed to buy and sell part of their emissions allowances. Most economic models indicate that achieving reductions through emissions trading with other countries may cost about half of what it would cost to achieve the same reductions domestically under the Kyoto Protocol.[15] Many analysts have pointed to trading as the only way that the United States could meet its Kyoto target. Yet few countries will have many excess tons to sell other than Russia and several other Eastern European countries that negotiated targets well above their expected emissions during the period 2008-2012. There is no guarantee that these allowances would be available:

- In order to sell allowances, countries must meet measuring and monitoring requirements. Some countries with excess emissions are far from meeting these requirements now, and it is likely that the United States and other countries would not know until at least 2007 whether they could meet their requirements. This creates enormous uncertainty about the cost of meeting the Kyoto Protocol until well after the United States has assumed its obligations.

- Even if these countries met their requirements and were allowed to sell their emission allowances, U.S. purchases of allowances would amount to many billions of dollars of financial transfers annually – without achieving any meaningful greenhouse gas emission reductions or climate benefit.

Advancing Technology to Address Climate Change

"America is a leader in technology and innovation. We all believe technology offers great promise to significantly reduce emissions. So we are creating the 'National Climate Change Technology Initiative.' "

– President George W. Bush

Executive Summary

New technologies hold the promise of increasing our supply of energy more efficiently and more cleanly. Technology has also played and will continue to play an important role in reducing greenhouse gas emissions and controlling costs. Because greenhouse gas emissions come from many sectors of the economy, a wide variety of technologies will be needed. A portfolio of technologies to address climate change could include energy efficient technologies; lower carbon-emitting technologies; carbon capture, storage and sequestration technologies; and new technological discoveries yet to be made.

To advance the technology across each of these areas, President Bush will create the National Climate Change Technology Initiative. The President is charging the Secretaries of Commerce and Energy, working with other agencies, to:

- Evaluate the current state of U.S. climate change technology research and development and make recommendations for improvements.
- Provide guidance on strengthening basic research at universities and national laboratories, including the development of the advanced mitigation technologies that offer the greatest promise for low-cost reductions of greenhouse gas emissions.
- Develop opportunities to enhance private-public partnerships in applied research and development to expedite innovative and cost-effective approaches to reduce greenhouse gas emissions.
- Make recommendations for funding demonstration projects for cutting-edge technologies.
- Develop improved technologies for measuring and monitoring gross and net greenhouse gas emissions.

The National Climate Change Technology Initiative also will enhance coordination across federal agencies, and among the federal government, universities, and the private sector.

The Importance of Technology to Mitigate Climate Change

Technology will continue to play an important role in reducing greenhouse gas emissions and controlling costs. The long-term objective of the 1992 Framework Convention on Climate Change – to stabilize greenhouse gas concentrations in the atmosphere – can be addressed in two ways. First, by reducing emissions of greenhouse gases. Because greenhouse gases are emitted so broadly across society, no single technology appears to be sufficient to stabilize the increasing atmospheric greenhouse gas concentrations. Rather, a portfolio of technologies aimed at improving energy efficiency, and increasing the use of low carbon fuels will help to reduce greenhouse gas emissions and ultimately to stabilize concentrations.

Second, greenhouse gas concentrations can be addressed by means of capturing and sequestering gases, either at the source or after they have been released into the atmosphere. Limited carbon capture is occurring today, using currently available technologies. Continued research and development is needed to explore advanced chemical and biological mechanisms to remove carbon dioxide from the atmosphere.

General Investment Criteria

The Presidents of the National Academy of Sciences, National Academy of Engineering, and the Institute of Medicine have provided some general principles for government investment in technology. In "Preparing for the 21st Century: Science and Technology Policy in a New Era" (October 23, 1997), the Presidents of the Academies offered criteria for such investment, including:

- Direct government investments in science and technology should be focused on long-range, broadly useful research in basic technology and science, both of which produce benefits far in excess of what private sector entities can capture for themselves.

- The federal government should cooperate with the private sector so that the United States maintains a position of leadership in those technologies that promise to have a major and continuing impact on broad areas of industrial and economic performance.

- But the government need not invest in fields in which the private sector already has programs of development in place. Private firms have the primary responsibility for product development, but federal and state governments play an important role in enhancing the civilian technology base and its adoption through their economic, regulatory, and trade policies, their support for research and development, and their own procurement of technology.

- Maintaining U.S. leadership in science and technology despite budget constraints will require discipline in the allocation of resources for federal investments. Within the general constraints determined by national priorities, the selection of individual projects must reflect the highest standards of the scientific and technical community.

Assessing the Current State of U.S. Climate Change Technology Research

The U.S. government has funded research to develop several technologies that mitigate climate change. In general, these technologies are aimed at: increasing energy efficiency to reduce the amount of energy consumed for goods produced in the economy; creating opportunities to switch to fuels and products that emit relatively lower amounts of greenhouse gases; enhancing carbon removal and storage in terrestrial, ocean, and geological sinks; and exploring innovative concepts along unconventional paths to discover new ways to reduce greenhouse gas emissions, such as advanced biotechnology concepts.

In order to advance climate change technology research, President Bush will:

- Charge the Secretary of Commerce, the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, and the Secretary of Energy to evaluate the current state of U.S. climate change technology research and development and make recommendations for improvements.

Strengthening Basic Climate Change Technology Research

The development of certain climate change mitigation technologies may be impractical for the private sector. Such technologies have some unique characteristics, including instances where the:

- Benefits are too widely spread for any one company to recover its investment at a profit;
- Cost or risk is too great for any individual company to bear alone; or
- Potential benefits are too far in the future to pass the threshold of private investment criteria.

Yet these advanced concepts may have the greatest potential to reduce greenhouse gas emissions at very low cost. For example, technological advances in areas such as biotechnology offer the potential for dramatic innovations in many areas. An important technology is the development of bioreactors that can harness the potential of microbial communities, such as photosynthetic bacteria, to produce clean fuels such as hydrogen. These bioreactors can exploit our increasing understanding of the biochemical pathways of microbial communities. While these biotechnologies are currently producing higher value products, like pharmaceuticals, significant new scientific research will be required for the direct production of fuels.

Similarly, scientists have begun work on promising new technologies for the cost-effective capture and sequestration of carbon in terrestrial and marine ecosystems. These opportunities may provide other environmental benefits as well, such as improved soil quality, better retention of moisture and nutrients, and reduced soil erosion. Researchers at the Department of Energy, for example, are studying "mineral carbonization," a technique for turning gaseous CO_2 into an environmentally-benign mineral that could be used to refill mine pits in land reclamation efforts.

Research and development efforts to date show promise for several options. However, many options are still emerging concepts both in the United States and internationally. Estimates of their potential for mitigating climate change are large, but highly uncertain. Markets for these or other technologies will be developed if buyers have some assurance about the quantity and quality of the product they are purchasing. In addition, there are many scientific and technological challenges regarding costs, environmental impacts, and public acceptability that must be resolved before these climate mitigation technologies can reach their potential. How and how much to invest in these areas are questions that must be answered to ensure that we as a society can harness our technological resources and capabilities and find the most cost-effective and environmentally sound solutions to the risks posed by increasing atmospheric concentrations of greenhouse gases.

Therefore, President Bush has directed that the National Climate Change Technology Initiative will:

- Provide guidance on strengthening basic research at universities and national laboratories, including the development of the advanced mitigation technologies that offer the greatest promise for low-cost reductions of greenhouse gas emissions.

Enhancing Private-Public Partnerships

It is important to effectively use the technologies that are and will soon become available. For example, technologies designed to increase energy efficiency, such as industrial applications of combined heat and power (CHP), enable both the local generation of electricity and the efficient use of the byproduct heat. When the quantities of the heat and power produced are well matched to the requirements of an industrial plant or facility, total efficiency of the fuel utilization can reach 90 percent, avoiding significant emissions of CO_2.

Similarly, the United States can achieve significant reductions of energy consumption and the related emissions of greenhouse gases through building systems with integrated electronic sensors, "smart" windows, and computers to monitor, maintain, and manage building operations. Also, one of the most challenging and important elements of a comprehensive strategy to address long-term greenhouse gas emission reductions is to improve the efficiency of our transportation fleet. The development of higher efficiency, hybrid passenger vehicles is an important first step.

In addition to energy efficiency, there are opportunities to increase the use of fuels that emit fewer greenhouse gases. For example, increased use of biomass residues and development of herbaceous crops, like native American prairie switchgrass, can mitigate greenhouse gases from coal-fired power plants and reduce air toxic emissions. Similarly, biomass can be converted into simple chemicals and plastic substitutes from which a new chemical industry can be formed.

Currently, the Federal government has established partners in the private sector to advance these technologies. It is critical to enhance this role and ensure that partnerships with industry are directed toward the most mutually beneficial outcomes.

Therefore, President Bush has directed that the National Climate Change Technology Initiative will:

- Develop opportunities to enhance private-public partnerships in applied research and development to expedite innovative and cost-effective approaches to reduce greenhouse gas emissions.

Promoting Cutting Edge Technology

Cutting-edge technologies hold the promise of helping to reduce emissions of greenhouse gases. For instance, geothermal power plants have a proven record of performance for producing reliable base-load power with minimal environmental effects. However, substantial known resources have not been tapped. Advanced technology is being developed to make more geothermal resources economical over a larger portion of the country. In response to the electricity shortages in the West, a demonstration of the economic and environmental benefits of the next generation of geothermal power plant technology, such as improved condensers and heat exchangers, will spur new development. As much as 100 to 300 megawatts of additional geothermal power to replace combustion-fired facilities will become available at new and existing plants within the next two years.

Fuel cells, a product of America's space program, hold great promise for reducing emissions. As noted in the National Energy Policy, the first generation fuel cells for stationary power applications entered commercial markets in 1995 and the second generation is currently in the demonstration phase. Innovative demonstration projects will reduce the high cost of this technology and offer a great potential to meet our energy needs.

Therefore, President Bush has directed that the National Climate Change Technology Initiative will:

- Make recommendations for funding demonstration projects for cutting-edge technologies.

Technology for Measuring and Monitoring Gross and Net Emissions

A fundamental challenge in attracting private sector investment to land-based greenhouse gas emission reduction or carbon sequestration projects is the ability to accurately quantify the net changes. Private sector investors are reluctant to participate in projects without reliable and credible quantification of the uncertainties associated with different land management practices. Cost effective measurement systems will not only increase the attractiveness of agricultural greenhouse gas projects to investors, but can also provide valuable information to individual farmers and ranchers in optimizing the use of fuel, fertilizers and other substances.

Significant advances in the science of remote sensing, coupled with land-based measurements, create new opportunities to monitor and verify greenhouse gas emissions. New and improved sensors that can be mounted on earth observing satellites and high altitude aircraft can deliver a unique capability to regularly monitor greenhouse gases with high accuracy, including carbon dioxide, methane, and ozone. This effort requires collaboration between the federal government and the private sector.

Therefore, President Bush has directed that the National Climate Change Technology Initiative will:

- Develop improved technologies for measuring and monitoring gross and net greenhouse gas emissions.

ADVANCING THE SCIENCE OF CLIMATE CHANGE

"MY CABINET-LEVEL WORKING GROUP HAS MET REGULARLY FOR THE LAST TEN WEEKS TO REVIEW THE MOST RECENT, MOST ACCURATE, AND MOST COMPREHENSIVE SCIENCE. THEY HAVE HEARD FROM SCIENTISTS OFFERING A WIDE SPECTRUM OF VIEWS; THEY HAVE REVIEWED THE FACTS, AND THEY HAVE LISTENED TO MANY THEORIES AND SUPPOSITIONS. THE WORKING GROUP ASKED THE HIGHLY RESPECTED NATIONAL ACADEMY OF SCIENCES TO PROVIDE US THE MOST UP-TO-DATE INFORMATION ABOUT WHAT IS KNOWN – AND WHAT IS NOT KNOWN – ON THE SCIENCE OF CLIMATE CHANGE…THE UNITED STATES [WILL] HELP LEAD THE WAY BY ADVANCING THE SCIENCE ON CLIMATE CHANGE."

-- PRESIDENT
GEORGE W. BUSH

Executive Summary

The United States leads the world in climate change research, spending more than the 15 nations of the European Union and Japan combined. Over the past decade, the United States has invested nearly $18 billion in such research and has increased our understanding of changes in climate, human links to these changes, and possible consequences.

To have the most up-to-date information of what is known and unknown about the science of climate change, the Cabinet-level climate change working group requested a report from the National Academy of Sciences (NAS). The NAS report identified substantial uncertainty in critical areas, such as:

- The feedbacks in the climate system that determine the magnitude and rate of temperature increases;
- The future usage of fossil fuels and the future emissions of methane;
- How much carbon is sequestered by oceans and other sinks and how much remains in the atmosphere;
- The details of regional climate change resulting from global climate change;
- The nature and causes of the natural variability of climate, its interactions with forced changes, and the direct and indirect effects of aerosols.

The National Academy of Sciences concluded, "[m]aking progress in reducing the large uncertainties in projections of future climate will require addressing a number of fundamental scientific questions relating to the buildup of greenhouse gases in the atmosphere and the behavior of the climate system."

To ensure that policies are shaped, and continue to be shaped, by the best science, President Bush will work aggressively to advance the science of climate change. Today, the President is announcing the U.S. Climate Change Research Initiative, which:

- Directs the Secretary of Commerce, working with other agencies, to set priorities for additional investments in climate change research, to review such investments, and to maximize coordination among federal agencies;
- Fully funds all priority research areas that the Secretary of Commerce's review finds are underfunded or need to be accelerated relative to other research;

- Challenges the major greenhouse gas emitting countries to increase significantly their investments in high priority areas of climate change research;
- Provides up to $25 million, and calls on other developed countries to provide matching funds, to help build climate observation systems in developing countries; and

U.S. Global Change Research Program

The United States leads the world in climate change research, spending approximately $1.6 billion annually. The United States is responsible for half of the world's annual climate change research expenditures, three times more than the next largest contributor and larger than the contributions of Japan and all 15 nations of the European Union combined.

The U.S. Global Change Research Program (USGCRP) is a national research program that coordinates most of the federal government's research on climate change. Definition of the program began under the Reagan Administration; the program became a presidential initiative under President George Bush, and was codified by Congress in the Global Change Research Act of 1990.

Since its establishment in 1990, USGCRP has spent approximately $18 billion. The President's fiscal year 2002 budget requests $1.6 billion for USGCRP. One half of this investment is devoted to climate change science and the other half to associated satellite systems. During its first decade, USGCRP research activities have identified a series of global scale changes, including ozone depletion, climate change, and land cover change. USGCRP has also explored and categorized likely human links to these changes, improved forecasts of the El Nino-Southern Oscillation, and increased understanding of other climate changes. The USGCRP has also developed and deployed a series of remote sensing satellites that could form the basis of a global environmental observing system, and has developed models to analyze the climate process and produce scenarios of potential future climate change and possible consequences.

The USGCRP currently conducts research and observations in the following areas: Understanding the Earth's Climate System; Composition and Chemistry of the Atmosphere; Global Water Cycle; Carbon Cycle Science; Biology and Biochemistry of Ecosystems; Human Dimensions of Global Change; and Paleoenvironment/Paleoclimate (analysis of prehistoric changes in climate). Ten federal agencies participate in the USGCRP and their respective roles are described in Annex I.

Key Gaps in Science of Climate Change

Despite the United States' intensive investment in climate change science over the past decade, numerous gaps remain in our understanding of climate change. The National Academy of Sciences identified in its report, Climate Change Science: An Analysis of Some Key Questions (June 2001), critical uncertainties about the science of climate change. At the most fundamental level, the report indicated the need to better understand the causes of warming. The National Academy of Sciences stated, "Greenhouse gases are accumulating in Earth's atmosphere as a result of human activities, causing surface air temperatures and subsurface ocean temperatures to rise. Temperatures are, in fact, rising. The changes observed over the last several decades are likely mostly due to human activities, but we cannot rule out that some significant part of these changes are also a reflection of natural variability."

The National Academy of Sciences report goes on to identify a range of specific areas of scientific uncertainty that require additional study and research. These gaps include:

- How much carbon is sequestered by oceans and terrestrial sinks and how much remains in the atmosphere is uncertain:
  - ✓ "How land contributes, by location and processes, to exchanges of carbon with the atmosphere is still highly uncertain. . . ." (p. 11)
  - ✓ "These estimates [of future carbon dioxide climate forcings] . . . are only approximate because of uncertainty about how efficiently the ocean and terrestrial biosphere will sequester atmospheric CO_2." (p. 13)
  - ✓ "How much of the carbon from future use of fossil fuels will be seen as increases in carbon dioxide in the atmosphere will depend on what fractions are taken up by land and by the oceans. The exchanges with land occur on various time scales, out to centuries for soil decomposition in high latitudes, and they are sensitive to climate change. Their projection into the future is highly problematic." (p. 18)

- The feedbacks in the climate system that determine the magnitude and rate of temperature increases are uncertain:

- ✓ "Because there is considerable uncertainty in current understanding of how the climate system varies naturally and reacts to emissions of greenhouse gases and aerosols, current estimates of the magnitude of future warming should be regarded as tentative and subject to future adjustments (either upward or downward)." (p. 1)

- ✓ "Much of the difference in predictions of global warming by various climate models is attributable to the fact that each model represents these [feedback] processes in its own particular way. These uncertainties will remain until a more fundamental understanding of the processes that control atmospheric relative humidity and clouds is achieved." (p. 4)

- ➢ The direct and indirect effects of aerosols are uncertain:

  - ✓ "The greatest uncertainty about the aerosol climate forcing—indeed, the largest of all the uncertainties about global climate forcings—is probably the indirect effect of aerosols on clouds." (p. 14)
  - ✓ "The great uncertainty about this indirect aerosol climate forcing presents a severe handicap both for the interpretation of past climate change and for future assessments of climate changes." (p. 14)
  - ✓ "Climate forcing by anthropogenic aerosols is a large source of uncertainty about future climate change." (p. 13)
  - ✓ "Because of the scientific uncertainties associated with the sources and composition of carbonaceous aerosols, projections of future impacts on climate are difficult." (p. 12)

- ➢ The details and impacts of regional climate change resulting from global climate change are uncertain:

  - ✓ "On the regional scale and in the longer term, there is much more uncertainty" with respect to effects on agriculture and forestry. (p. 19)
  - ✓ "The Northern Hemisphere as a whole experienced a slight cooling from 1946-75, and the cooling during that period was quite marked over the eastern United States. The cause of this hiatus in the warming is still under debate." (p. 16)
  - ✓ "Health outcomes in response to climate change are the subject of intense debate. . . .The understanding of the relationships between weather/climate and human health is in its infancy and therefore the health consequences of climate change are poorly understood. The costs, benefits, and availability of resources for adaptation are also uncertain." (p. 20)
  - ✓ "Changes in storm frequency and intensity are one of the more uncertain elements of future climate change prediction." (p. 20)

- ➢ The nature and causes of the natural variability of climate and its interactions with forced changes are uncertain:

  - ✓ "Because of the large and still uncertain level of natural variability inherent in the climate record and the uncertainties in the time histories of the various forcing agents (and particularly aerosols), a causal linkage between the buildup of greenhouse gases in the atmosphere and the observed climate changes during the 20th century cannot be unequivocally established." (p. 17)

- ✓ The value of indirect effect of ozone changes induced by solar ultraviolet irradiance variations "remains highly uncertain." (p. 14)

- ➢ The future usage of fossil fuels and the future emissions of methane are uncertain:

  - ✓ "With a better understanding of the sources and sinks of methane, it may be possible to encourage practices . . . that lead to a decrease in atmospheric methane and significantly reduce future climate change." (p. 13)
  - ✓ "There is no definitive scientific basis for choosing among several possible explanations for these variations in the rates of change of global methane contributions, making it very difficult to predict its future atmospheric concentrations." (p. 11)

In response to these gaps in our knowledge, the National Academy of Sciences study also recommends, "research that couples physical, chemical biological and human systems; an improved capability of integrating scientific knowledge, including its uncertainty, into effective decision support systems, and an ability to conduct research at the regional or sectoral level that promotes analysis of the response of human and natural systems to multiple stresses."

The NAS report also indicates that to advance the understanding of climate change, it will be necessary to have "a global observing system in support of long term climate monitoring and prediction [and] concentration on large-scale modeling through increased, dedicated supercomputing and human resources." In addition to the recent National Academy of Sciences report, the USGCRP has updated its ten-year plan and submitted it to the National Research Council (NRC) for review. High priority areas for further research are identified in numerous recent reports and documents, such as: "Global Environmental Change: Research Pathways for the Next Decade" (NRC 1998), "Capacity of US Climate Modeling to Support Climate Change Assessment Activities" (NRC, 1998), "Adequacy of Climate Observing Systems" (NRC, 1999), and others.

Advancing the Science

The National Academy of Sciences report states that an "effective strategy for advancing the understanding of climate change will also require...efforts to ensure that climate research is supported and managed to assure innovation, effectiveness and efficiency." Over the decade of the USGCRP, interagency management of the program has weakened. The National Research Council in its report, "Global Environmental Change: Research Pathways for the Next Decade" (NRC 1998), identified the problem, and the USGCRP draft ten-year plan has proposed changes to the management structure. Such issues merit careful and high-level review, in consultation with the Congress.

Therefore, to advance the science of climate change and focus efforts on the many key areas of uncertainty, President Bush will:

- Direct the Secretary of Commerce, working with other agencies, to set priorities for additional investments in climate change research, to review such investments, and to maximize coordination among federal agencies.
- Fully fund all priority research areas that the review finds are underfunded or need to be accelerated relative to other research. Such areas could include the carbon cycle, climate modeling, and global water cycle.

The United States is making significant investments in the science of climate change and is pledging to accelerate its own research. Climate change is a global problem, however, and other nations must continue to advance the state of scientific knowledge.

The National Research Council, the US Global Change Research Program, and the World Meteorological Organization have all identified the building of a global observing system to monitor climate as being crucial to improving our understanding of the science of climate change. This system must include developing countries that have limited resources to make the necessary measurements.

The United States, Europe, and Japan each have significant climate modeling capabilities. The United States leads the world in the basic science of climate modeling, and Europe and Japan have built dedicated centers for climate modeling with a clearly defined mission.

Therefore, to enhance research, build a global climate observation system, and improve climate modeling, President Bush will:

- Challenge the major greenhouse gas emitting countries to increase significantly their investments in high priority areas of climate change research.
- Provide up to $25 million to help build climate observation systems in developing countries throughout the world, and call upon other developed countries to provide matching funds for such an investment.
- Propose a joint venture with the European Union, Japan and others to develop state-of-the-art climate modeling to help us better predict the causes and consequences of climate change.

Annex I

Agency Roles in the USGCRP

US Department of Agriculture: USDA-sponsored research focuses on understanding terrestrial systems and the effects of global change (including water balance, atmospheric deposition, vegetative quality, and UV-B radiation) on food, fiber, and forestry production in agricultural, forest, and range ecosystems. USDA estimates changes in carbon stocks on forests and agricultural lands and greenhouse gas emissions from agricultural sources, and performs research on how agricultural and forestry activities such as afforestation, changes in tillage practices, and bioenergy can contribute to a reduction in greenhouse gases.

Department of Commerce/National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA): NOAA's ground, ocean, and satellite observations, with an emphasis on oceanic and atmospheric dynamics, circulation, and chemistry, are an important part of the U.S. research program. They have resulted in improvements in climate modeling, prediction, and information management capabilities. NOAA also sponsors a wide range of studies on ocean-land-atmosphere interactions, the global hydrological cycle, and the role of global transfers of carbon dioxide among the atmosphere, ocean and terrestrial biosphere in climate change; the projection and assessment of variability across multiple timescales and the study of the relationship between the natural climate system and society and the development of methodologies for applying climate information to problems of social and economic consequences.

Department of Defense: The Department of Defense continues a history of participation in the USGCRP through sponsored research that concurrently satisfies national security requirements and stated goals of the USGCRP.

Department of Energy: Research supported by DOE's Office of Biological and Environmental Research (BER) addresses the effects of energy production and use on the global Earth system, primarily through studies of climate response. It includes research in climate modeling, atmospheric chemistry and transport, atmospheric properties and processes affecting the Earth's radiation balance and sources and sinks of energy-related greenhouse gases (primarily CO_2). It also includes research on the consequences of atmospheric and climatic changes on ecological systems and resources, critical data needs for the detection and attribution of climate change, tools and methods needed to conduct scientific assessments of climate change, and education and training of scientists and researchers in global change.

National Institutes of Health: Four NIH institutes support research on the health effects of UV and near-UV radiation. Their main objectives include increased understanding of the effects of UV and near-UV radiation exposure on target organs (e.g., eyes, skin, immune system) and of the molecular changes that lead to these effects, and the development of strategies to prevent the initiation or promotion of disease before it is clinically defined. National Institutes of Environmental Health Sciences (NIEHS) supports research on the health effects of chlorofluorocarbon replacement chemicals, including studies on the metabolism and toxicity of hydrochlorofluorocarbons and halogenated hydrocarbons.

Department of the Interior/U.S. Geological Survey (USGS): Research at USGS examines terrestrial and marine processes and the natural history of global change, including the interactions between climate and the hydrologic system. Studies seek to understand the character of past and present environments and the geological, biological, hydrological, and geochemical processes involved in environmental change.

Environmental Protection Agency: EPA's Global Change Research Program is an assessment-oriented program with primary emphasis on understanding the potential consequences of climate variability and change on human health, ecosystems, and socio-economic systems in the United States. This entails: (1) improving the scientific basis for evaluating effects of global change in the context of other stresses and human dimensions (as humans are catalysts of and respond to global change); (2) conducting assessments of the risks and opportunities presented by global change; and (3) assessing adaptation options to improve society's ability to effectively respond to the risks and opportunities presented by global change as they emerge.

National Aeronautics and Space Administration: NASA research efforts in global change involve space-based studies of the Earth as an integrated system, including research and satellite programs studying atmospheric chemistry and ozone; ocean surface winds, tropical precipitation and the global hydrological cycle and climate variability cycle; and the global carbon cycle, ocean biological productivity and land surface vegetation and ecosystems. The space-based activity complements ongoing ground-based research programs in the observation, understanding, and modeling of radiation, climate dynamics, and hydrology and water resources; ecosystem dynamics and biogeochemical cycles; atmospheric chemistry; and the processing, archiving, retrieval, dissemination, and use of global change data. The focus is Earth system science, which involves interdisciplinary research and coupled modeling. Development of algorithms for retrieval of the information content of space-based observations is carried out as part of the flight mission.

National Science Foundation: NSF global change research programs support research and related activities to advance the fundamental understanding of dynamic physical, biological, and socio-economic systems and the interactions among them. The programs encourage interdisciplinary activities with particular focus on Earth system processes and the consequences of change. NSF programs facilitate data acquisition and information management activities necessary for fundamental research on global change, promote the enhancement of models designed to improve our understanding of Earth system processes and interactions, and develop advanced analytic methods to facilitate basic research. NSF also supports fundamental research on the general processes used by organizations to identify and evaluate policies for mitigation, adaptation, and other responses to the challenge of varying environmental conditions.

Smithsonian Institution: The Smithsonian Institution program strives to improve knowledge of the natural processes involved in global climate change, to provide a long-term repository of climate-relevant research materials for present and future studies, and to bring this knowledge to various audiences, ranging from scholarly to lay public. The unique contribution of the Smithsonian Institution is a long-term perspective – e.g., undertaking investigations that may require extended study before producing useful results and conducting observations on sufficiently long (e.g. decadal) time-scales to resolve human-caused modification of natural variability.

###

Developing an Effective and Science Based Approach to Addressing Global Climate Change

Summary

- The Bush Administration is working with our allies to develop an effective and science-based approach to addressing global climate change. Global climate change is an issue that affects the entire world -- and it is an issue that must be addressed by the entire world.

- The surface temperature of the earth is warming and concentrations of greenhouse gases, especially CO2, have increased substantially since the beginning of the Industrial revolution – and the National Academy of Sciences indicates this increase is due in large part to human activity.

- The National Academy of Sciences report concludes that significant areas of uncertainty remain, including how much effect natural fluctuations in climate may have had on warming, how fast climate changes will occur, the magnitude of those changes, and their impacts.

- The Kyoto Protocol is fundamentally flawed:

  - Its targets have no scientific basis.
  - Kyoto's targets are unrealistic -- many countries will not achieve them.
  - Kyoto's targets are draconian -- requiring a 30% reduction in U.S. greenhouse gas emissions. Compliance with these targets could cause a 1% to 2% reduction in the United States GDP by 2010 – a reduction comparable to the oil shock of the 1970's – and would increase prices for consumers and cause layoffs of workers.
  - Kyoto is ineffective: it excludes developing countries, whose net emissions of greenhouse gases already exceed those of industrialized countries.

- While the U.S. rejects Kyoto, the President has committed the U.S. to a leadership role in addressing the issue of climate change.

- The U.S. already takes many proactive steps to address global climate change:

  - The U.S. spends $1.6 billion annually on climate science -- more than Japan and the 15 EU countries combined.
  - The U.S.' many initiatives have produced results -- the carbon-intensity of the economy has been lowered by 15% since 1990.
  - The President's Comprehensive National Energy Plan could further cut greenhouse gas emissions through conservation, improved energy efficiency, and increased reliance on natural gas, renewables, hydro and nuclear power.

- The President wants to increase the U.S.' efforts to address global climate change by:

  - Establishing the "U.S. Climate Change Research Initiative" to advance the science of climate change, focusing on key areas of uncertainty.

- ✓ Fully funds all priority research areas
- ✓ Challenges major greenhouse gas emitting countries to increase significantly their investments.
- ✓ Provides matching funds to help build climate observation systems in developing countries
- ✓ Proposes a joint venture with the EU, Japan and others to develop state-of-the-art climate modeling

- Launching the "National Climate Change Technology Initiative", tasking the Secretaries of Commerce and Energy to strengthen basic research and develop public-private partnerships to bring cutting edge technologies to market; and

- Increasing cooperative efforts within our hemisphere and globally, especially with developing countries, tasking the Secretary of State and others to build partnerships to measure and mitigate emissions, undertake research, and invest in forestation.

➢ The President directed the Cabinet-level climate change working group to consider approaches to reduce greenhouse gas emissions, drawing on the power of markets and the promise of technology. That effort will be guided by several basic principles:

- The approach must be consistent with the long-term goal of stabilizing concentrations of greenhouse gases in the atmosphere.
- Our actions should be measured, as we learn more and build on it.
- Our approach must be flexible to adjust to new information and take advantage of new technology.
- We must ensure continued economic growth in the U.S. and the world.
- We should pursue market-based incentives and spur technological innovation.
- And our approach must be based on global participation, including developing countries.

➢ The President directed Secretary Powell and EPA Administrator Whitman to work actively with friends and allies to explore common approaches to climate change consistent with these principles.

Scientists' Report Doesn't
Support the Kyoto Treaty

By Richard S. Lindzen. Mr. Lindzen, a professor of meteorology at MIT, was a member of the National Academy of Sciences panel on climate change.

Last week the National Academy of Sciences released a report on climate change, prepared in response to a request from the White House, that was depicted in the press as an implicit endorsement of the Kyoto Protocol. CNN's Michelle Mitchell was typical of the coverage when she declared that the report represented "a unanimous decision that global warming is real, is getting worse, and is due to man. There is no wiggle room."

As one of 11 scientists who prepared the report, I can state that this is simply untrue. For starters, the NAS never asks that all participants agree to all elements of a report, but rather that the report represent the span of views. This the full report did, making clear that there is no consensus, unanimous or otherwise, about long-term climate trends and what causes them.

As usual, far too much public attention was paid to the hastily prepared summary rather than to the body of the report. The summary began with a zinger -- that greenhouse gases are accumulating in Earth's atmosphere as a result of human activities, causing surface air temperatures and subsurface ocean temperatures to rise, etc., before following with the necessary qualifications. For example, the full text noted that 20 years was too short a period for estimating long-term trends, but the summary forgot to mention this.

Our primary conclusion was that despite some knowledge and agreement, the science is by no means settled. We are quite confident (1) that global mean temperature is about 0.5 degrees Celsius higher than it was a century ago; (2) that atmospheric levels of carbon dioxide have risen over the past two centuries; and (3) that carbon dioxide is a greenhouse gas whose increase is likely to warm the earth (one of many, the most important being water vapor and clouds).

But -- and I cannot stress this enough -- we are not in a position to confidently attribute past climate change to carbon dioxide or to forecast what the climate will be in the future. That is to say, contrary to media impressions, agreement with the three basic statements tells us almost nothing relevant to policy discussions.

One reason for this uncertainty is that, as the report states, the climate is always changing; change is the norm. Two centuries ago, much of the Northern Hemisphere was emerging from a little ice age. A millennium ago, during the Middle Ages, the same region was in a warm period. Thirty years ago, we were concerned with global cooling.

Distinguishing the small recent changes in global mean temperature from the natural variability, which is unknown, is not a trivial task. All attempts so far make the assumption that existing computer climate models simulate natural variability, but I doubt that anyone really believes this assumption.

We simply do not know what relation, if any, exists between global climate changes and water vapor, clouds, storms, hurricanes, and other factors, including regional climate changes, which are generally much larger than global changes and not correlated with them. Nor do we know how to predict changes in greenhouse gases. This is because we cannot forecast economic and technological change over the next century, and also because there are many man-made substances whose properties and levels are not well known, but which could be comparable in importance to carbon dioxide.

What we do is know that a doubling of carbon dioxide by itself would produce only a modest temperature increase of one degree Celsius. Larger projected increases depend on "amplification" of the carbon dioxide by more important, but poorly modeled, greenhouse gases, clouds and water vapor.

The press has frequently tied the existence of climate change to a need for Kyoto. The NAS panel did not address this question. My own view, consistent with the panel's work, is that the Kyoto Protocol would not result in a substantial reduction in global warming. Given the difficulties in significantly limiting levels of atmospheric carbon dioxide, a more effective policy might well focus on other greenhouse substances whose potential for reducing global warming in a short time may be greater.

The panel was finally asked to evaluate the work of the United Nations' Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, focusing on the Summary for Policymakers, the only part ever read or quoted. The Summary for Policymakers, which is seen as endorsing Kyoto, is commonly presented as the consensus of thousands of the world's foremost climate scientists. Within the confines of professional courtesy, the NAS panel essentially concluded that the IPCC's Summary for Policymakers does not provide suitable guidance for the U.S. government.

The full IPCC report is an admirable description of research activities in climate science, but it is not specifically directed at policy. The Summary for Policymakers is, but it is also a very different document. It represents a consensus of government representatives (many of whom are also their nations' Kyoto representatives), rather than of scientists. The resulting document has a strong tendency to disguise uncertainty, and conjures up some scary scenarios for which there is no evidence.

Science, in the public arena, is commonly used as a source of authority with which to bludgeon political opponents and propagandize uninformed citizens. This is what has been done with both the reports of the IPCC and the NAS. It is a reprehensible practice that corrodes our ability to make rational decisions. A fairer view of the science will show that there is still a vast amount of uncertainty -- far more than advocates of Kyoto would like to acknowledge -- and that the NAS report has hardly ended the debate. Nor was it meant to.

Introduction

Three months ago, the President directed a Cabinet-level review of U.S. climate change policy. Members of the Cabinet, the Vice President, and senior White House staff have been meeting to examine the science, technologies, current U.S. efforts, and a wide range of innovative options for addressing concentrations of greenhouse gases in the atmosphere.

During that time, the Cabinet-level climate change working group has held regular and intensive sessions and has heard from many experts representing a wide range of views. To obtain the most recent information and a balanced view of what we know and do not know about the science of climate change, the working group requested a report from the National Academy of Sciences. The report outlines areas supported by the science and significant gaps in our knowledge of climate change.

The following material contains the initial findings of the working group: summaries of current U.S. actions, an analysis of the Kyoto Protocol, and proposals to advance the science, advance technologies, and create partnerships in the Western Hemisphere and throughout the world to address climate change.

The President has directed the Cabinet-level climate change working group to press forward and develop innovative approaches in accordance with several basic principles. These approaches should: (1) be consistent with the long-term goal of stabilizing greenhouse gas concentrations in the atmosphere; (2) be measured, as we learn more from science and build on it; (3) be flexible to adjust to new information and take advantage of new technology; (4) ensure continued economic growth and prosperity; (5) pursue market-based incentives and spur technological innovation; and (6) be based on global participation, including developing countries.

The Cabinet-level climate change working group will continue its review consistent with these principles.

CURRENT U.S. ACTIONS TO ADDRESS CLIMATE CHANGE

"The earth's well-being is also an issue important to America – and it's an issue that should be important to every nation and in every part of the world. My Administration is committed to a leadership role on the issue of climate change. We recognize our responsibility and we will meet it, at home, in our hemisphere, and in the world."

--President George W. Bush

Executive Summary

The United States government is currently pursuing a broad range of strategies to reduce emissions of greenhouse gases in the major greenhouse gas emitting sectors of our economy:

- Electricity -- Federal programs promote greenhouse gas reductions through the development of cleaner, more efficient technologies for electricity generation and transmission. The government is also supporting the development of renewable resources, such as solar energy, wind power, geothermal energy, hydropower, bio-energy, and hydrogen.
- Transportation -- The United States is currently promoting the development of fuel-efficient motor vehicles and trucks, researching options for producing cleaner fuels, and implementing programs to reduce the number of vehicle miles traveled.
- Industry -- The United States is implementing many partnership programs with industry to reduce emissions of carbon dioxide (CO_2) and other greenhouse gases, to promote source reduction and recycling, and to increase the use of combined heat and power.
- Buildings -- Federal voluntary partnership programs promote energy efficiency in the nation's commercial, residential, and government buildings (including schools) by offering technical assistance as well as the labeling of efficient products, efficient new homes, and efficient office buildings.
- Agriculture and Forestry -- The Federal government is implementing conservation programs that have the benefit of sequestering carbon in soils and off-setting agricultural emissions of greenhouse gases.
- The Federal Government – The Federal Government has taken steps to reduce greenhouse gas emissions from energy use in Federal buildings and in the Federal transportation fleet.
- The National Energy Policy – The National Energy Policy includes new recommendations to promote energy efficiency, conservation, increased use of natural gas and renewable energy, and the new construction of nuclear capacity.

United States government climate change programs are achieving real results, helping to reduce greenhouse gas emissions by 66 million metric tons of carbon equivalent in 2000. United States carbon intensity – the amount of CO2 emitted per unit of GDP – declined 15% from 1990 to 1999.

In addition, businesses, state and local governments, and non-governmental organizations are addressing global climate change – by improving the measurement and reporting of greenhouse gas emission reductions; through voluntary reductions, including emissions trading; and actions to sequester carbon through tree planting and forest preservation, restoration and management.

The Federal Government

The U.S. government is currently pursuing a broad range of strategies to reduce emissions of greenhouse gases, including:

- Voluntary public-private partnership programs that promote energy efficiency and the broader use of renewable energy;
- Research and development (R&D) investments and tax incentives to increase energy efficiency and the broader use of renewable energy;
- Appliance standards that increase the minimum level of efficiency of products on the market;
- Financial incentives such as grants to states and localities; and
- Programs to reduce greenhouse gas emissions from Federal buildings and transportation fleets.

These programs are achieving real reductions in greenhouse gas emissions – the U.S. government estimates that its existing climate change programs reduced emissions by 66 million metric tons of carbon equivalent (MMTCE) in 2000[1], approximately 2.7% of total emissions. The amount of CO2 emitted per unit of GDP declined 15% from 1990 to 1999.[2]

The following sections highlight illustrative programs in the major greenhouse gas emitting sectors of the economy: the electric power industry (32% of total U.S. greenhouse gas emissions); transportation (27%); other industry (21%); residential and commercial buildings (13%); and agriculture and forestry (net 7%) (unlike other sectors of the economy, agricultural and forestry activities can actively remove carbon dioxide from the atmosphere).[3]

Electricity

Federal programs promote greenhouse gas reductions through the development of cleaner, more efficient technologies for electricity generation and transmission. For example, the Environmental Protection Agency/Department of Energy Combined Heat and Power Challenge program has the goal of doubling U.S. combined heat and power capacity by 2010 by providing technical assistance and addressing regulatory issues where possible.

The Federal government is also supporting renewable resources such as solar energy, wind power, geothermal energy, hydropower, bio-energy, and hydrogen. For example, the Department of Energy supports the development of a wide range of solar and renewable energy technology, seeking to improve their reliability, expand their applicability, and reduce their costs. These activities have been very successful in bringing down technology costs. The cost of producing photo-voltaic modules has decreased 50 percent since 1991, and the cost of wind power has decreased 85 percent since 1980. Commercial success has been achieved for both of these areas in certain applications.

Transportation

The U.S. is currently promoting the development of fuel-efficient motor vehicles and trucks, researching options for producing cleaner fuels, and implementing programs to reduce the number of vehicle miles traveled. For example, through the Partnership for a New Generation of Vehicles (PNGV) program, the research has directly led to the commercial introduction of new hybrid vehicles and soon hydrogen as well. Commercialization of such vehicles could cut fuel use and carbon emissions for individual vehicles significantly and could lay the foundation for large, long-term fuel and carbon benefits. If 10% of the on-road vehicle fleet utilized PNGV technologies, the aggregate emission reductions could be approximately 20 million metric tons of carbon equivalent per year. The program is being extended to sport utility vehicles and other light trucks which, because of their lower baseline fuel economies, have the potential for even greater overall fuel and carbon savings per vehicle.

Industry

The U.S. government is implementing many partnership programs with industry to reduce emissions of carbon dioxide (CO_2) and other greenhouse gases, to promote source reduction and recycling, and to increase the use of combined heat and power. For example, current voluntary partnerships directed toward eliminating market barriers to the profitable collection and use of methane that otherwise would be released to the atmosphere are expected to hold methane emissions at or below 1990 levels through 2010. Since the launch of EPA's Voluntary Aluminum Industrial Partnership in 1995, the program's membership has grown to include 22 of the nation's 23 aluminum smelters, representing 94% of U.S. production capacity. As of 2000, program partners cumulatively achieved a 45% reduction in perfluorocarbon (a high global warming potential gas) emissions from 1990 levels.[4]

Commercial and Residential Buildings

Partnership programs promote energy efficiency in the nation's commercial, residential, and government buildings (including schools) by offering technical assistance as well as the labeling of efficient products, efficient new homes, and efficient office buildings. As one example, the

[4] The Power of Partnerships: Energy Star and Other Voluntary Programs, 2000 Annual Report of the Climate Protection Partnerships Division, U.S. EPA, Summer 2001.

EPA/DOE Energy Star program collaborates with a wide range of building owners and users -- retailers, real estate investors, small businesses, governments and schools. Each partner commits to improve the energy performance of its facilities and the most efficient buildings are awarded the Energy Star label. More than 16% of the U.S. commercial, public, and industrial building market is enrolled in Energy Star. Nationwide, Energy Star has eliminated the need for over 10,000 megawatts of peak generating capacity – equivalent to 20 large (50 MW) power plants.[5]

Agriculture and Forestry

The Federal government is conducting research into methods to reduce emissions of methane and nitrous oxide from agriculture, and is implementing conservation programs that have the benefit of sequestering carbon in soils and forests. For example, USDA's Conservation Reserve Program (CRP) has taken over 36 million acres of environmentally sensitive crop land out of production. CRP provides long-term environmental benefits, including the offset of up to 12 MMTCE each year.[6]

The Federal Government

The Federal Government has taken steps to reduce greenhouse gas emissions from energy use in Federal buildings and in the Federal transportation fleet by:

- Requiring all Federal agencies to take steps to cut greenhouse gas emissions from energy use in buildings by 30% below 1990 levels by 2010.
- Directing Federal agencies in Washington, D.C. to offer to their employees up to $65 per month in transit and van pool benefits.
- Requiring Federal agencies to implement strategies to reduce their fleet's annual petroleum consumption by 20% relative to 1999 consumption levels and to use alternative fuels a majority of the time.

Businesses, States and Communities, and Non-Governmental Organizations

Businesses, states and local governments, and non-governmental organizations are also moving forward to address global climate change -- through programs to improve the measurement and reporting of emission reductions; through voluntary programs, including emissions trading programs; and through sequestration programs. For example:

- Under the Voluntary Reporting of Greenhouse Gases program, provided by Section 1605(b) of the Energy Policy Act of 1992, more than 200 companies voluntarily reported to the Department of Energy their voluntary measures to reduce, avoid or sequester greenhouse gas emissions, principally carbon dioxide.[7] These companies undertook 1,715 projects and achieved greenhouse gas emission reductions and carbon sequestration equivalent to 61.5 MMTCE, or about 3.4 percent of 1999 total U.S. greenhouse gas emissions.[8]

- Electric Utilities: Several companies have committed to reducing greenhouse gas emissions. Measures include:

  - ✓ Improved generation efficiency (seasonal use of natural gas, hydroelectric turbine replacements, expanded capacity, shortened outage schedules at nuclear plants);
  - ✓ Improved pipeline, transmission and distribution equipment efficiencies (including reducing leaks);
  - ✓ Increased use of renewables (wind, biomass and solar);
  - ✓ Improved home and office energy efficiencies (low-income weatherization, home energy audits, inefficient refrigerator and freezer removal and recycling, installation of advanced energy management systems, planting trees, and retrofitting energy efficient lighting in company buildings); and
  - ✓ Investments in more efficient technologies (programs to install geothermal heat pumps, commercialize emerging energy efficient and renewable energy technologies, accelerate introduction of electric vehicles into the marketplace, and enhance carbon sequestration).

- Oil and Gas: Some oil and gas companies have added greenhouse gas reductions to their list of corporate priorities. One company intends to reduce its greenhouse gases by 10% by 2002 (over 1990 levels), and another company is seeking to reduce by 10% by 2010. To do this, the company is adopting an internal system of company-wide emissions trading to meet its goal in the most cost-effective way possible. Significant gains can be made from such measures as reducing flaring and leaking.

- Auto Manufacturers: Auto manufacturers have announced production plans for hybrid gas and electric vehicles in 2003 or 2004 and have pledged to increase their sport utility vehicles' fuel economy by 25% by 2005.

- Chemicals: A chemicals trade association supports voluntary programs and its members' actions to improve energy efficiency and reduce greenhouse gases. For example, one company says it will reduce its greenhouse gas emissions by 65% (by 2010, over 1990 levels). It already has cut its global emissions by 45% by making major process-change investments (reducing nitrous oxides), by holding energy consumption flat even with tremendous production growth (with powerhouse and process efficiencies), and increased use of renewable energy. Another company is working to reduce energy use by 20% per unit of production by 2005.

- Non-Governmental Organizations. Several non-governmental organizations and coalitions have initiated partnership programs with large global corporations to reduce emissions of greenhouse gases, and promote the use of energy conservation, renewable energy sources, and efficient technologies. Non-governmental organizations also are working with companies to support forestry projects that sequester carbon through tree planting and forest preservation, restoration and management.

- States. More than 25 states have initiated state-based action plans to reduce greenhouse gas emissions. Some states are using market-based mechanisms to achieve reductions. For example, the State of New Jersey has established a 3.5% statewide reduction goal and is developing voluntary agreements with various businesses.

The National Energy Policy

The National Energy Policy includes numerous recommendations to promote energy efficiency and conservation and to reduce emissions of greenhouse gases through the use of alternative, renewable, and cleaner forms of energy.[9] These recommendations include:

Efficiency and Conservation Measures

- Tax incentives and other initiatives to promote the use of combined heat and power.

  The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of the Treasury to work with Congress to encourage increased energy efficiency through combined heat and power (CHP) projects by shortening the depreciation life for CHP projects or providing an investment tax credit.

  The NEPD Group also recommended that the President direct the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) to work with local and state governments to promote the use of well-designed CHP and other clean power generation at brownfields sites, consistent with the local communities' interests. EPA will also work to clarify liability issues if they are raised at a particular site.

  The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the EPA Administrator to promote CHP through flexibility in environmental permitting.

- Reviewing and providing recommendations on establishing CAFE standards as well as other market-based approaches to increase the national average fuel economy of new motor vehicles.

  The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of Transportation to:

  - ✓ Review and provide recommendations on establishing Corporate Average Fuel Economy (CAFE) standards with due consideration of the National Academy of Sciences study to be released in July 2001. Responsibly crafted CAFE standards should increase efficiency without negatively impacting the U.S. automotive industry. The determination of future fuel economy standards must therefore be addressed analytically and based on sound science.

[9] National Energy Policy: Report of the National Energy Policy Development Group, May 2001.

- ✓ Consider passenger safety, economic concerns, and disparate impact on the U.S. versus foreign fleets of automobiles.
- ✓ Look at other market-based approaches to increasing the national average fuel economy of new motor vehicles.

➢ Directing all agencies to use technological advances to better protect our environment.

The Administration remains committed to investing in Intelligent Transportation Systems (ITS) and encourages the private sector to invest in ITS applications. This Department of Transportation (DOT) program funds the development of improved transportation infrastructure that will reduce congestion, such as traveler information/navigation systems, freeway management, and electronic toll collection. ITS applications reduce fuel associated with travel.

The Administration remains committed to the DOT's fuel-cell-powered transit bus program, authored by the Transportation Equity Act for the 21st Century (TEA-21). This program demonstrates the viability of fuel-cell power plants for transit bus applications.

The Administration remains committed to the Clean Buses program. TEA-21 establishes a new clean fuel formula grant program, which provides an opportunity to accelerate the introduction of advanced bus propulsion technologies into the mainstream of the nation's transit fleet.

➢ Promoting energy efficiency, including expanding the Energy Star program.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of Energy to conduct a review of current funding and historic performance of energy efficiency research and development programs in light of the recommendations of this report. In addition, the NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Office of Science and Technology Policy and the President's Council of Advisors on Science and Technology to review and make recommendations on using the nation's energy resources more efficiently.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of Energy to promote greater energy efficiency:

- ✓ Expand the Energy Star program beyond office buildings to include schools, retail buildings, health care facilities, and homes.
- ✓ Extend the Energy Star labeling program to additional products, appliances, and services.
- ✓ Strengthen Department of Energy public education programs relating to energy efficiency.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the EPA Administrator to develop and implement a strategy to increase public awareness of the sizable savings that energy efficiency offers to homeowners across the country.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of Energy to establish a national priority for improving energy efficiency. The priority would be to improve the energy intensity of the U.S. economy as measured by the amount of energy required for each dollar of economic productivity. This increased efficiency should be pursued through the combined efforts of industry, consumers, and federal, state, and local governments.

- Conserving energy at federal facilities.

  The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct heads of executive departments and agencies to take appropriate actions to conserve energy use at their facilities to the maximum extent consistent with the effective discharge of public responsibilities.

- Improving and expanding appliance standards.

  The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of Energy to improve the energy efficiency of appliances:

  - ✓ Support the appliance standards program for covered products, setting higher standards where technologically feasible and economically justified.
  - ✓ Expand the scope of the appliance standards program, setting standards for additional appliances where technologically feasible and economically justified.

- Promoting congestion mitigation technologies.

  The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of Transportation to review and promote congestion mitigation technologies and strategies and work with Congress on legislation to implement these strategies.

- Reducing demand for transportation fuels by establishing a ground freight management program.

  The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the EPA and DOT to develop ways to reduce demand for petroleum transportation fuels. These agencies will work with the trucking industry to establish a program to reduce emissions and fuel consumption from long-haul trucks at truck stops by implementing alternatives to idling, such as electrification and auxiliary power units at truck stops along interstate highways. EPA and DOT will develop partnership agreements with trucking fleets, truck stops, and manufacturers of idle-reducing technologies (e.g., portable auxiliary packs, electrification) to install and use low-emission-idling technologies.

Alternative, Renewable, and Clean Forms of Energy

- Increasing America's use of renewable and alternative energy

  The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretaries of the Interior and Energy to re-evaluate access limitations to federal lands in order to increase renewable energy production, such as biomass, wind, geothermal, and solar.

The NEPD Group supported the increase of $39.2 million in the FY 2002 budget amendment for the Department of Energy's Energy Supply account that would provide increased support for research and development of renewable energy resources.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of Energy to conduct a review of current funding and historic performance of renewable energy and alternative energy research and development programs. Based on this review, the Secretary of Energy is then directed to propose appropriate funding of those research and development programs that are performance-based and are modeled as public-private partnerships.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of the Treasury to work with Congress to develop legislation to provide for a temporary income tax credit available for the purchase of new hybrid or fuel-cell vehicles between 2002 and 2007.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of the Treasury to work with Congress on legislation to expand the section 29 tax credit to make it available for new landfill methane projects. The credit could be tiered, depending on whether a landfill is already required by federal law to collect and flare its methane emissions due to local air pollution concerns.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of the Interior to determine ways to reduce the delays in geothermal lease processing as part of the permitting review process.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of the Treasury to work with Congress on legislation to extend and expand tax credits for electricity produced using wind and biomass. The President's budget request extends the present 1.7 cents per kilowatt hour tax credit for electricity produced from wind and biomass; expands eligible biomass sources to include forest-related sources, agricultural sources, and certain urban sources; and allows a credit for electricity produced from biomass co-fired with coal.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of the Treasury to work with Congress on legislation to provide a new 15 percent tax credit for residential solar energy property, up to a maximum credit of $2,000.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of the Treasury to work with Congress to continue the ethanol excise tax exemption.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of Energy to develop next-generation technology—including hydrogen and fusion:

- ✓ Develop an education campaign that communicates the benefits of alternative forms of energy, including hydrogen and fusion.

- ✓ Focus research and development efforts on integrating current programs regarding hydrogen, fuel cells, and distributed energy.
- ✓ Support legislation reauthorizing the Hydrogen Energy Act.

- Promoting new construction of nuclear capacity that could significantly reduce future greenhouse gas emissions.

  The NEPD Group recommended that the President support the expansion of nuclear energy in the United States as a major component of our national energy policy. Following are specific components of the recommendation:

  - ✓ Encourage the Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC) to ensure that safety and environmental protection are high priorities as they prepare to evaluate and expedite applications for licensing new advanced-technology nuclear reactors.
  - ✓ Encourage the NRC to facilitate efforts by utilities to expand nuclear energy generation in the United States by uprating existing nuclear plants safely.
  - ✓ Encourage the NRC to relicense existing nuclear plants that meet or exceed safety standards.
  - ✓ Direct the Secretary of Energy and the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency to assess the potential of nuclear energy to improve air quality.
  - ✓ Increase resources as necessary for nuclear safety enforcement in light of the potential increase in generation.
  - ✓ Use the best science to provide a deep geologic repository for nuclear waste.
  - ✓ Support legislation clarifying that qualified funds set aside by plant owners for eventual decommissioning will not be taxed as part of the transaction.
  - ✓ Support legislation to extend the Price–Anderson Act.

- Market-based three pollutant strategy

  The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the EPA Administrator to work with Congress to propose legislation that would establish a flexible, market-based program to significantly reduce and cap emissions of sulfur dioxide, nitrogen oxides, and mercury from electric power generators. Such a program (with appropriate measures to address local concerns) would provide significant public health benefits, including ancillary carbon benefits, even as we increase electricity supplies.

  - ✓ Establish mandatory reduction targets for emissions of three main pollutants: sulfur dioxide, nitrogen oxides, and mercury.
  - ✓ Phase in reductions over a reasonable period of time, similar to the successful acid rain reduction program established by the 1990 amendments to the Clean Air Act.
  - ✓ Provide regulatory certainty to allow utilities to make modifications to their plants without fear of new litigation.

- ✓ Provide market-based incentives, such as emissions trading credits to help achieve the required reductions.

- Increasing research in clean coal technologies.

  The NEPD recommended that the President direct the Department of Energy to continue to develop advanced clean coal technology:

  - ✓ Investing $2 billion over 10 years to fund research in clean coal technologies.
  - ✓ Supporting a permanent extension of the existing research and development tax credit.
  - ✓ Directing federal agencies to explore regulatory approaches that will encourage advancements in environmental technology.

An Analysis of the Kyoto Protocol

"The Kyoto Protocol was fatally flawed in fundamental ways. But the process used to bring nations together to discuss our joint response to climate change is an important one."

– President George W. Bush

The Kyoto Protocol is fundamentally flawed. The Kyoto Protocol fails to establish a long-term goal based on science, poses serious and unnecessary risks to the U.S. and world economies, and is ineffective in addressing climate change because it excludes major parts of the world.

The Kyoto Protocol is ineffective in addressing climate change because it excludes developing countries. The Kyoto Protocol's emission reduction requirements apply only to industrialized countries. Developing countries can continue business as usual under the Kyoto Protocol, despite their rapidly growing emissions:

- Current data indicate that developing countries' net emissions (including emissions and uptake from land use activities) have already exceeded those of the developed world.[10]

- Moreover, annual developing country emissions of CO_2 will double between 1990 and 2010 – an increase that represents over twice as many tons as all of the reductions the United States would be required to take under the Kyoto Protocol.[11]

The Kyoto Protocol's targets are not based on science. Its targets and timetables were arrived at arbitrarily as a result of political negotiations, and are not related to any specific scientific information or long-term objective.

The Kyoto Protocol targets are precipitous. Under the Kyoto Protocol, the emission reduction target for the United States is 7% from 1990 levels for each year from 2008-2012. However, the figure of 7% is misleading, because it does not take into account growth in emissions between 1990 and 2012. The actual reduction from the U.S. current emissions trajectory for this period is over 30%.[12] In other words, meeting its target would require the United States to reduce its output of greenhouse emissions by one third in less than seven years. This would require U.S. firms to retire large amounts of capital stock prematurely, imposing substantial and unnecessary costs on the U.S. economy. The Kyoto Protocol also does not allow countries to count legitimate mitigation activities. In fact, it restricts the use of carbon sequestration as a means of achieving its objectives. Moreover, it does not address substances that impact climate change, such as black carbon and tropospheric ozone, reductions of which would also have significant health benefits.

[12] United States submission to the UNFCCC, 2001

The Kyoto Protocol risks significantly harming the U.S. and global economies. The Kyoto Protocol would require the United States to meet its target no matter what the cost, which could be substantial:

- Most models suggest a reduction in U.S. GDP of 1% to 2% by 2010 as a result of Kyoto without emissions trading.[13] A 2% reduction is comparable to the impact of the oil shock of the 1970s.

- A U.S. Department of Energy model suggests a reduction of as much as 4%[14] in GDP under a scenario in which the United States does not establish implementing regulations before 2005 and does not engage in emissions trading. Under such a scenario, the U.S. economy could be transformed from one of strong growth to recession, with potentially significant repercussions for the global economy.

Other major industrial countries also have very stringent targets. The difficulties many countries will have in meeting their targets raises serious questions about the viability of the Kyoto Protocol framework.

The Kyoto Protocol would leave the United States dangerously dependent on other countries to meet its emission targets. Under the Kyoto Protocol's emissions trading system, countries are allowed to buy and sell part of their emissions allowances. Most economic models indicate that achieving reductions through emissions trading with other countries may cost about half of what it would cost to achieve the same reductions domestically under the Kyoto Protocol.[15] Many analysts have pointed to trading as the only way that the United States could meet its Kyoto target. Yet few countries will have many excess tons to sell other than Russia and several other Eastern European countries that negotiated targets well above their expected emissions during the period 2008-2012. There is no guarantee that these allowances would be available:

- In order to sell allowances, countries must meet measuring and monitoring requirements. Some countries with excess emissions are far from meeting these requirements now, and it is likely that the United States and other countries would not know until at least 2007 whether they could meet their requirements. This creates enormous uncertainty about the cost of meeting the Kyoto Protocol until well after the United States has assumed its obligations.

- Even if these countries met their requirements and were allowed to sell their emission allowances, U.S. purchases of allowances would amount to many billions of dollars of financial transfers annually – without achieving any meaningful greenhouse gas emission reductions or climate benefit.

Advancing Technology to Address Climate Change

"America is a leader in technology and innovation. We all believe technology offers great promise to significantly reduce emissions. So we are creating the 'National Climate Change Technology Initiative.' "

– President George W. Bush

Executive Summary

New technologies hold the promise of increasing our supply of energy more efficiently and more cleanly. Technology has also played and will continue to play an important role in reducing greenhouse gas emissions and controlling costs. Because greenhouse gas emissions come from many sectors of the economy, a wide variety of technologies will be needed. A portfolio of technologies to address climate change could include energy efficient technologies; lower carbon-emitting technologies; carbon capture, storage and sequestration technologies; and new technological discoveries yet to be made.

To advance the technology across each of these areas, President Bush will create the National Climate Change Technology Initiative. The President is charging the Secretaries of Commerce and Energy, working with other agencies, to:

- Evaluate the current state of U.S. climate change technology research and development and make recommendations for improvements.
- Provide guidance on strengthening basic research at universities and national laboratories, including the development of the advanced mitigation technologies that offer the greatest promise for low-cost reductions of greenhouse gas emissions.
- Develop opportunities to enhance private-public partnerships in applied research and development to expedite innovative and cost-effective approaches to reduce greenhouse gas emissions.
- Make recommendations for funding demonstration projects for cutting-edge technologies.
- Develop improved technologies for measuring and monitoring gross and net greenhouse gas emissions.

The National Climate Change Technology Initiative also will enhance coordination across federal agencies, and among the federal government, universities, and the private sector.

The Importance of Technology to Mitigate Climate Change

Technology will continue to play an important role in reducing greenhouse gas emissions and controlling costs. The long-term objective of the 1992 Framework Convention on Climate Change – to stabilize greenhouse gas concentrations in the atmosphere – can be addressed in two ways. First, by reducing emissions of greenhouse gases. Because greenhouse gases are emitted so broadly across society, no single technology appears to be sufficient to stabilize the increasing atmospheric greenhouse gas concentrations. Rather, a portfolio of technologies aimed at improving energy efficiency, and increasing the use of low carbon fuels will help to reduce greenhouse gas emissions and ultimately to stabilize concentrations.

Second, greenhouse gas concentrations can be addressed by means of capturing and sequestering gases, either at the source or after they have been released into the atmosphere. Limited carbon capture is occurring today, using currently available technologies. Continued research and development is needed to explore advanced chemical and biological mechanisms to remove carbon dioxide from the atmosphere.

General Investment Criteria

The Presidents of the National Academy of Sciences, National Academy of Engineering, and the Institute of Medicine have provided some general principles for government investment in technology. In "Preparing for the 21st Century: Science and Technology Policy in a New Era" (October 23, 1997), the Presidents of the Academies offered criteria for such investment, including:

- Direct government investments in science and technology should be focused on long-range, broadly useful research in basic technology and science, both of which produce benefits far in excess of what private sector entities can capture for themselves.

- The federal government should cooperate with the private sector so that the United States maintains a position of leadership in those technologies that promise to have a major and continuing impact on broad areas of industrial and economic performance.

- But the government need not invest in fields in which the private sector already has programs of development in place. Private firms have the primary responsibility for product development, but federal and state governments play an important role in enhancing the civilian technology base and its adoption through their economic, regulatory, and trade policies, their support for research and development, and their own procurement of technology.

- Maintaining U.S. leadership in science and technology despite budget constraints will require discipline in the allocation of resources for federal investments. Within the general constraints determined by national priorities, the selection of individual projects must reflect the highest standards of the scientific and technical community.

Assessing the Current State of U.S. Climate Change Technology Research

The U.S. government has funded research to develop several technologies that mitigate climate change. In general, these technologies are aimed at: increasing energy efficiency to reduce the amount of energy consumed for goods produced in the economy; creating opportunities to switch to fuels and products that emit relatively lower amounts of greenhouse gases; enhancing carbon removal and storage in terrestrial, ocean, and geological sinks; and exploring innovative concepts along unconventional paths to discover new ways to reduce greenhouse gas emissions, such as advanced biotechnology concepts.

In order to advance climate change technology research, President Bush will:

- Charge the Secretary of Commerce, the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, and the Secretary of Energy to evaluate the current state of U.S. climate change technology research and development and make recommendations for improvements.

Strengthening Basic Climate Change Technology Research

The development of certain climate change mitigation technologies may be impractical for the private sector. Such technologies have some unique characteristics, including instances where the:

- Benefits are too widely spread for any one company to recover its investment at a profit;
- Cost or risk is too great for any individual company to bear alone; or
- Potential benefits are too far in the future to pass the threshold of private investment criteria.

Yet these advanced concepts may have the greatest potential to reduce greenhouse gas emissions at very low cost. For example, technological advances in areas such as biotechnology offer the potential for dramatic innovations in many areas. An important technology is the development of bioreactors that can harness the potential of microbial communities, such as photosynthetic bacteria, to produce clean fuels such as hydrogen. These bioreactors can exploit our increasing understanding of the biochemical pathways of microbial communities. While these biotechnologies are currently producing higher value products, like pharmaceuticals, significant new scientific research will be required for the direct production of fuels.

Similarly, scientists have begun work on promising new technologies for the cost-effective capture and sequestration of carbon in terrestrial and marine ecosystems. These opportunities may provide other environmental benefits as well, such as improved soil quality, better retention of moisture and nutrients, and reduced soil erosion. Researchers at the Department of Energy, for example, are studying "mineral carbonization," a technique for turning gaseous CO_2 into an environmentally-benign mineral that could be used to refill mine pits in land reclamation efforts.

Research and development efforts to date show promise for several options. However, many options are still emerging concepts both in the United States and internationally. Estimates of their potential for mitigating climate change are large, but highly uncertain. Markets for these or other technologies will be developed if buyers have some assurance about the quantity and quality of the product they are purchasing. In addition, there are many scientific and technological challenges regarding costs, environmental impacts, and public acceptability that must be resolved before these climate mitigation technologies can reach their potential. How and how much to invest in these areas are questions that must be answered to ensure that we as a society can harness our technological resources and capabilities and find the most cost-effective and environmentally sound solutions to the risks posed by increasing atmospheric concentrations of greenhouse gases.

Therefore, President Bush has directed that the National Climate Change Technology Initiative will:

- Provide guidance on strengthening basic research at universities and national laboratories, including the development of the advanced mitigation technologies that offer the greatest promise for low-cost reductions of greenhouse gas emissions.

Enhancing Private-Public Partnerships

It is important to effectively use the technologies that are and will soon become available. For example, technologies designed to increase energy efficiency, such as industrial applications of combined heat and power (CHP), enable both the local generation of electricity and the efficient use of the byproduct heat. When the quantities of the heat and power produced are well matched to the requirements of an industrial plant or facility, total efficiency of the fuel utilization can reach 90 percent, avoiding significant emissions of CO_2.

Similarly, the United States can achieve significant reductions of energy consumption and the related emissions of greenhouse gases through building systems with integrated electronic sensors, "smart" windows, and computers to monitor, maintain, and manage building operations. Also, one of the most challenging and important elements of a comprehensive strategy to address long-term greenhouse gas emission reductions is to improve the efficiency of our transportation fleet. The development of higher efficiency, hybrid passenger vehicles is an important first step.

In addition to energy efficiency, there are opportunities to increase the use of fuels that emit fewer greenhouse gases. For example, increased use of biomass residues and development of herbaceous crops, like native American prairie switchgrass, can mitigate greenhouse gases from coal-fired power plants and reduce air toxic emissions. Similarly, biomass can be converted into simple chemicals and plastic substitutes from which a new chemical industry can be formed.

Currently, the Federal government has established partners in the private sector to advance these technologies. It is critical to enhance this role and ensure that partnerships with industry are directed toward the most mutually beneficial outcomes.

Therefore, President Bush has directed that the National Climate Change Technology Initiative will:

- Develop opportunities to enhance private-public partnerships in applied research and development to expedite innovative and cost-effective approaches to reduce greenhouse gas emissions.

Promoting Cutting Edge Technology

Cutting-edge technologies hold the promise of helping to reduce emissions of greenhouse gases. For instance, geothermal power plants have a proven record of performance for producing reliable base-load power with minimal environmental effects. However, substantial known resources have not been tapped. Advanced technology is being developed to make more geothermal resources economical over a larger portion of the country. In response to the electricity shortages in the West, a demonstration of the economic and environmental benefits of the next generation of geothermal power plant technology, such as improved condensers and heat exchangers, will spur new development. As much as 100 to 300 megawatts of additional geothermal power to replace combustion-fired facilities will become available at new and existing plants within the next two years.

Fuel cells, a product of America's space program, hold great promise for reducing emissions. As noted in the National Energy Policy, the first generation fuel cells for stationary power applications entered commercial markets in 1995 and the second generation is currently in the demonstration phase. Innovative demonstration projects will reduce the high cost of this technology and offer a great potential to meet our energy needs.

Therefore, President Bush has directed that the National Climate Change Technology Initiative will:

- Make recommendations for funding demonstration projects for cutting-edge technologies.

Technology for Measuring and Monitoring Gross and Net Emissions

A fundamental challenge in attracting private sector investment to land-based greenhouse gas emission reduction or carbon sequestration projects is the ability to accurately quantify the net changes. Private sector investors are reluctant to participate in projects without reliable and credible quantification of the uncertainties associated with different land management practices. Cost effective measurement systems will not only increase the attractiveness of agricultural greenhouse gas projects to investors, but can also provide valuable information to individual farmers and ranchers in optimizing the use of fuel, fertilizers and other substances.

Significant advances in the science of remote sensing, coupled with land-based measurements, create new opportunities to monitor and verify greenhouse gas emissions. New and improved sensors that can be mounted on earth observing satellites and high altitude aircraft can deliver a unique capability to regularly monitor greenhouse gases with high accuracy, including carbon dioxide, methane, and ozone. This effort requires collaboration between the federal government and the private sector.

Therefore, President Bush has directed that the National Climate Change Technology Initiative will:

- Develop improved technologies for measuring and monitoring gross and net greenhouse gas emissions.

ADVANCING THE SCIENCE OF CLIMATE CHANGE

"MY CABINET-LEVEL WORKING GROUP HAS MET REGULARLY FOR THE LAST TEN WEEKS TO REVIEW THE MOST RECENT, MOST ACCURATE, AND MOST COMPREHENSIVE SCIENCE. THEY HAVE HEARD FROM SCIENTISTS OFFERING A WIDE SPECTRUM OF VIEWS; THEY HAVE REVIEWED THE FACTS, AND THEY HAVE LISTENED TO MANY THEORIES AND SUPPOSITIONS. THE WORKING GROUP ASKED THE HIGHLY RESPECTED NATIONAL ACADEMY OF SCIENCES TO PROVIDE US THE MOST UP-TO-DATE INFORMATION ABOUT WHAT IS KNOWN – AND WHAT IS NOT KNOWN – ON THE SCIENCE OF CLIMATE CHANGE…THE UNITED STATES [WILL] HELP LEAD THE WAY BY ADVANCING THE SCIENCE ON CLIMATE CHANGE."

-- PRESIDENT
GEORGE W. BUSH

Executive Summary

The United States leads the world in climate change research, spending more than the 15 nations of the European Union and Japan combined. Over the past decade, the United States has invested nearly $18 billion in such research and has increased our understanding of changes in climate, human links to these changes, and possible consequences.

To have the most up-to-date information of what is known and unknown about the science of climate change, the Cabinet-level climate change working group requested a report from the National Academy of Sciences (NAS). The NAS report identified substantial uncertainty in critical areas, such as:

- The feedbacks in the climate system that determine the magnitude and rate of temperature increases;
- The future usage of fossil fuels and the future emissions of methane;
- How much carbon is sequestered by oceans and other sinks and how much remains in the atmosphere;
- The details of regional climate change resulting from global climate change;
- The nature and causes of the natural variability of climate, its interactions with forced changes, and the direct and indirect effects of aerosols.

The National Academy of Sciences concluded, "[m]aking progress in reducing the large uncertainties in projections of future climate will require addressing a number of fundamental scientific questions relating to the buildup of greenhouse gases in the atmosphere and the behavior of the climate system."

To ensure that policies are shaped, and continue to be shaped, by the best science, President Bush will work aggressively to advance the science of climate change. Today, the President is announcing the U.S. Climate Change Research Initiative, which:

- Directs the Secretary of Commerce, working with other agencies, to set priorities for additional investments in climate change research, to review such investments, and to maximize coordination among federal agencies;
- Fully funds all priority research areas that the Secretary of Commerce's review finds are underfunded or need to be accelerated relative to other research;

U.S. Global Change Research Program

The United States leads the world in climate change research, spending approximately $1.6 billion annually. The United States is responsible for half of the world's annual climate change research expenditures, three times more than the next largest contributor and larger than the contributions of Japan and all 15 nations of the European Union combined.

The U.S. Global Change Research Program (USGCRP) is a national research program that coordinates most of the federal government's research on climate change. Definition of the program began under the Reagan Administration; the program became a presidential initiative under President George Bush, and was codified by Congress in the Global Change Research Act of 1990.

Since its establishment in 1990, USGCRP has spent approximately $18 billion. The President's fiscal year 2002 budget requests $1.6 billion for USGCRP. One half of this investment is devoted to climate change science and the other half to associated satellite systems. During its first decade, USGCRP research activities have identified a series of global scale changes, including ozone depletion, climate change, and land cover change. USGCRP has also explored and categorized likely human links to these changes, improved forecasts of the El Nino-Southern Oscillation, and increased understanding of other climate changes. The USGCRP has also developed and deployed a series of remote sensing satellites that could form the basis of a global environmental observing system, and has developed models to analyze the climate process and produce scenarios of potential future climate change and possible consequences.

The USGCRP currently conducts research and observations in the following areas: Understanding the Earth's Climate System; Composition and Chemistry of the Atmosphere; Global Water Cycle; Carbon Cycle Science; Biology and Biochemistry of Ecosystems; Human Dimensions of Global Change; and Paleoenvironment/Paleoclimate (analysis of prehistoric changes in climate). Ten federal agencies participate in the USGCRP and their respective roles are described in Annex I.

Key Gaps in Science of Climate Change

Despite the United States' intensive investment in climate change science over the past decade, numerous gaps remain in our understanding of climate change. The National Academy of Sciences identified in its report, Climate Change Science: An Analysis of Some Key Questions (June 2001), critical uncertainties about the science of climate change. At the most fundamental level, the report indicated the need to better understand the causes of warming. The National Academy of Sciences stated, "Greenhouse gases are accumulating in Earth's atmosphere as a result of human activities, causing surface air temperatures and subsurface ocean temperatures to rise. Temperatures are, in fact, rising. The changes observed over the last several decades are likely mostly due to human activities, but we cannot rule out that some significant part of these changes are also a reflection of natural variability."

The National Academy of Sciences report goes on to identify a range of specific areas of scientific uncertainty that require additional study and research. These gaps include:

- How much carbon is sequestered by oceans and terrestrial sinks and how much remains in the atmosphere is uncertain:
  - ✓ "How land contributes, by location and processes, to exchanges of carbon with the atmosphere is still highly uncertain. . . ." (p. 11)
  - ✓ "These estimates [of future carbon dioxide climate forcings] . . . are only approximate because of uncertainty about how efficiently the ocean and terrestrial biosphere will sequester atmospheric CO_2." (p. 13)
  - ✓ "How much of the carbon from future use of fossil fuels will be seen as increases in carbon dioxide in the atmosphere will depend on what fractions are taken up by land and by the oceans. The exchanges with land occur on various time scales, out to centuries for soil decomposition in high latitudes, and they are sensitive to climate change. Their projection into the future is highly problematic." (p. 18)

- The feedbacks in the climate system that determine the magnitude and rate of temperature increases are uncertain:

- ✓ "Because there is considerable uncertainty in current understanding of how the climate system varies naturally and reacts to emissions of greenhouse gases and aerosols, current estimates of the magnitude of future warming should be regarded as tentative and subject to future adjustments (either upward or downward)." (p. 1)

- ✓ "Much of the difference in predictions of global warming by various climate models is attributable to the fact that each model represents these [feedback] processes in its own particular way. These uncertainties will remain until a more fundamental understanding of the processes that control atmospheric relative humidity and clouds is achieved." (p. 4)

- ➢ The direct and indirect effects of aerosols are uncertain:

  - ✓ "The greatest uncertainty about the aerosol climate forcing—indeed, the largest of all the uncertainties about global climate forcings—is probably the indirect effect of aerosols on clouds." (p. 14)
  - ✓ "The great uncertainty about this indirect aerosol climate forcing presents a severe handicap both for the interpretation of past climate change and for future assessments of climate changes." (p. 14)
  - ✓ "Climate forcing by anthropogenic aerosols is a large source of uncertainty about future climate change." (p. 13)
  - ✓ "Because of the scientific uncertainties associated with the sources and composition of carbonaceous aerosols, projections of future impacts on climate are difficult." (p. 12)

- ➢ The details and impacts of regional climate change resulting from global climate change are uncertain:

  - ✓ "On the regional scale and in the longer term, there is much more uncertainty" with respect to effects on agriculture and forestry. (p. 19)
  - ✓ "The Northern Hemisphere as a whole experienced a slight cooling from 1946-75, and the cooling during that period was quite marked over the eastern United States. The cause of this hiatus in the warming is still under debate." (p. 16)
  - ✓ "Health outcomes in response to climate change are the subject of intense debate. . . .The understanding of the relationships between weather/climate and human health is in its infancy and therefore the health consequences of climate change are poorly understood. The costs, benefits, and availability of resources for adaptation are also uncertain." (p. 20)
  - ✓ "Changes in storm frequency and intensity are one of the more uncertain elements of future climate change prediction." (p. 20)

- ➢ The nature and causes of the natural variability of climate and its interactions with forced changes are uncertain:

  - ✓ "Because of the large and still uncertain level of natural variability inherent in the climate record and the uncertainties in the time histories of the various forcing agents (and particularly aerosols), a causal linkage between the buildup of greenhouse gases in the atmosphere and the observed climate changes during the 20th century cannot be unequivocally established." (p. 17)

- ✓ The value of indirect effect of ozone changes induced by solar ultraviolet irradiance variations "remains highly uncertain." (p. 14)

- ➢ The future usage of fossil fuels and the future emissions of methane are uncertain:

  - ✓ "With a better understanding of the sources and sinks of methane, it may be possible to encourage practices . . . that lead to a decrease in atmospheric methane and significantly reduce future climate change." (p. 13)
  - ✓ "There is no definitive scientific basis for choosing among several possible explanations for these variations in the rates of change of global methane contributions, making it very difficult to predict its future atmospheric concentrations." (p. 11)

In response to these gaps in our knowledge, the National Academy of Sciences study also recommends, "research that couples physical, chemical biological and human systems; an improved capability of integrating scientific knowledge, including its uncertainty, into effective decision support systems, and an ability to conduct research at the regional or sectoral level that promotes analysis of the response of human and natural systems to multiple stresses."

The NAS report also indicates that to advance the understanding of climate change, it will be necessary to have "a global observing system in support of long term climate monitoring and prediction [and] concentration on large-scale modeling through increased, dedicated supercomputing and human resources." In addition to the recent National Academy of Sciences report, the USGCRP has updated its ten-year plan and submitted it to the National Research Council (NRC) for review. High priority areas for further research are identified in numerous recent reports and documents, such as: "Global Environmental Change: Research Pathways for the Next Decade" (NRC 1998), "Capacity of US Climate Modeling to Support Climate Change Assessment Activities" (NRC, 1998), "Adequacy of Climate Observing Systems" (NRC, 1999), and others.

Advancing the Science

The National Academy of Sciences report states that an "effective strategy for advancing the understanding of climate change will also require...efforts to ensure that climate research is supported and managed to assure innovation, effectiveness and efficiency." Over the decade of the USGCRP, interagency management of the program has weakened. The National Research Council in its report, "Global Environmental Change: Research Pathways for the Next Decade" (NRC 1998), identified the problem, and the USGCRP draft ten-year plan has proposed changes to the management structure. Such issues merit careful and high-level review, in consultation with the Congress.

Therefore, to advance the science of climate change and focus efforts on the many key areas of uncertainty, President Bush will:

- Direct the Secretary of Commerce, working with other agencies, to set priorities for additional investments in climate change research, to review such investments, and to maximize coordination among federal agencies.
- Fully fund all priority research areas that the review finds are underfunded or need to be accelerated relative to other research. Such areas could include the carbon cycle, climate modeling, and global water cycle.

The United States is making significant investments in the science of climate change and is pledging to accelerate its own research. Climate change is a global problem, however, and other nations must continue to advance the state of scientific knowledge.

The National Research Council, the US Global Change Research Program, and the World Meteorological Organization have all identified the building of a global observing system to monitor climate as being crucial to improving our understanding of the science of climate change. This system must include developing countries that have limited resources to make the necessary measurements.

The United States, Europe, and Japan each have significant climate modeling capabilities. The United States leads the world in the basic science of climate modeling, and Europe and Japan have built dedicated centers for climate modeling with a clearly defined mission.

Therefore, to enhance research, build a global climate observation system, and improve climate modeling, President Bush will:

- Challenge the major greenhouse gas emitting countries to increase significantly their investments in high priority areas of climate change research.
- Provide up to $25 million to help build climate observation systems in developing countries throughout the world, and call upon other developed countries to provide matching funds for such an investment.
- Propose a joint venture with the European Union, Japan and others to develop state-of-the-art climate modeling to help us better predict the causes and consequences of climate change.

Annex I

Agency Roles in the USGCRP

US Department of Agriculture: USDA-sponsored research focuses on understanding terrestrial systems and the effects of global change (including water balance, atmospheric deposition, vegetative quality, and UV-B radiation) on food, fiber, and forestry production in agricultural, forest, and range ecosystems. USDA estimates changes in carbon stocks on forests and agricultural lands and greenhouse gas emissions from agricultural sources, and performs research on how agricultural and forestry activities such as afforestation, changes in tillage practices, and bioenergy can contribute to a reduction in greenhouse gases.

Department of Commerce/National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA): NOAA's ground, ocean, and satellite observations, with an emphasis on oceanic and atmospheric dynamics, circulation, and chemistry, are an important part of the U.S. research program. They have resulted in improvements in climate modeling, prediction, and information management capabilities. NOAA also sponsors a wide range of studies on ocean-land-atmosphere interactions, the global hydrological cycle, and the role of global transfers of carbon dioxide among the atmosphere, ocean and terrestrial biosphere in climate change; the projection and assessment of variability across multiple timescales and the study of the relationship between the natural climate system and society and the development of methodologies for applying climate information to problems of social and economic consequences.

Department of Defense: The Department of Defense continues a history of participation in the USGCRP through sponsored research that concurrently satisfies national security requirements and stated goals of the USGCRP.

Department of Energy: Research supported by DOE's Office of Biological and Environmental Research (BER) addresses the effects of energy production and use on the global Earth system, primarily through studies of climate response. It includes research in climate modeling, atmospheric chemistry and transport, atmospheric properties and processes affecting the Earth's radiation balance and sources and sinks of energy-related greenhouse gases (primarily CO_2). It also includes research on the consequences of atmospheric and climatic changes on ecological systems and resources, critical data needs for the detection and attribution of climate change, tools and methods needed to conduct scientific assessments of climate change, and education and training of scientists and researchers in global change.

National Institutes of Health: Four NIH institutes support research on the health effects of UV and near-UV radiation. Their main objectives include increased understanding of the effects of UV and near-UV radiation exposure on target organs (e.g., eyes, skin, immune system) and of the molecular changes that lead to these effects, and the development of strategies to prevent the initiation or promotion of disease before it is clinically defined. National Institutes of Environmental Health Sciences (NIEHS) supports research on the health effects of chlorofluorocarbon replacement chemicals, including studies on the metabolism and toxicity of hydrochlorofluorocarbons and halogenated hydrocarbons.

Department of the Interior/U.S. Geological Survey (USGS): Research at USGS examines terrestrial and marine processes and the natural history of global change, including the interactions between climate and the hydrologic system. Studies seek to understand the character of past and present environments and the geological, biological, hydrological, and geochemical processes involved in environmental change.

Environmental Protection Agency: EPA's Global Change Research Program is an assessment-oriented program with primary emphasis on understanding the potential consequences of climate variability and change on human health, ecosystems, and socio-economic systems in the United States. This entails: (1) improving the scientific basis for evaluating effects of global change in the context of other stresses and human dimensions (as humans are catalysts of and respond to global change); (2) conducting assessments of the risks and opportunities presented by global change; and (3) assessing adaptation options to improve society's ability to effectively respond to the risks and opportunities presented by global change as they emerge.

National Aeronautics and Space Administration: NASA research efforts in global change involve space-based studies of the Earth as an integrated system, including research and satellite programs studying atmospheric chemistry and ozone; ocean surface winds, tropical precipitation and the global hydrological cycle and climate variability cycle; and the global carbon cycle, ocean biological productivity and land surface vegetation and ecosystems. The space-based activity complements ongoing ground-based research programs in the observation, understanding, and modeling of radiation, climate dynamics, and hydrology and water resources; ecosystem dynamics and biogeochemical cycles; atmospheric chemistry; and the processing, archiving, retrieval, dissemination, and use of global change data. The focus is Earth system science, which involves interdisciplinary research and coupled modeling. Development of algorithms for retrieval of the information content of space-based observations is carried out as part of the flight mission.

National Science Foundation: NSF global change research programs support research and related activities to advance the fundamental understanding of dynamic physical, biological, and socio-economic systems and the interactions among them. The programs encourage interdisciplinary activities with particular focus on Earth system processes and the consequences of change. NSF programs facilitate data acquisition and information management activities necessary for fundamental research on global change, promote the enhancement of models designed to improve our understanding of Earth system processes and interactions, and develop advanced analytic methods to facilitate basic research. NSF also supports fundamental research on the general processes used by organizations to identify and evaluate policies for mitigation, adaptation, and other responses to the challenge of varying environmental conditions.

Smithsonian Institution: The Smithsonian Institution program strives to improve knowledge of the natural processes involved in global climate change, to provide a long-term repository of climate-relevant research materials for present and future studies, and to bring this knowledge to various audiences, ranging from scholarly to lay public. The unique contribution of the Smithsonian Institution is a long-term perspective – e.g., undertaking investigations that may require extended study before producing useful results and conducting observations on sufficiently long (e.g. decadal) time-scales to resolve human-caused modification of natural variability.

###

Developing an Effective and Science Based Approach to Addressing Global Climate Change

Summary

- The Bush Administration is working with our allies to develop an effective and science-based approach to addressing global climate change. Global climate change is an issue that affects the entire world -- and it is an issue that must be addressed by the entire world.

- The surface temperature of the earth is warming and concentrations of greenhouse gases, especially CO2, have increased substantially since the beginning of the Industrial revolution – and the National Academy of Sciences indicates this increase is due in large part to human activity.

- The National Academy of Sciences report concludes that significant areas of uncertainty remain, including how much effect natural fluctuations in climate may have had on warming, how fast climate changes will occur, the magnitude of those changes, and their impacts.

- The Kyoto Protocol is fundamentally flawed:

  - Its targets have no scientific basis.
  - Kyoto's targets are unrealistic -- many countries will not achieve them.
  - Kyoto's targets are draconian -- requiring a 30% reduction in U.S. greenhouse gas emissions. Compliance with these targets could cause a 1% to 2% reduction in the United States GDP by 2010 – a reduction comparable to the oil shock of the 1970's – and would increase prices for consumers and cause layoffs of workers.
  - Kyoto is ineffective: it excludes developing countries, whose net emissions of greenhouse gases already exceed those of industrialized countries.

- While the U.S. rejects Kyoto, the President has committed the U.S. to a leadership role in addressing the issue of climate change.

- The U.S. already takes many proactive steps to address global climate change:

  - The U.S. spends $1.6 billion annually on climate science -- more than Japan and the 15 EU countries combined.
  - The U.S.' many initiatives have produced results -- the carbon-intensity of the economy has been lowered by 15% since 1990.
  - The President's Comprehensive National Energy Plan could further cut greenhouse gas emissions through conservation, improved energy efficiency, and increased reliance on natural gas, renewables, hydro and nuclear power.

- The President wants to increase the U.S.' efforts to address global climate change by:

  - Establishing the "U.S. Climate Change Research Initiative" to advance the science of climate change, focusing on key areas of uncertainty.

- ✓ Fully funds all priority research areas
- ✓ Challenges major greenhouse gas emitting countries to increase significantly their investments.
- ✓ Provides matching funds to help build climate observation systems in developing countries
- ✓ Proposes a joint venture with the EU, Japan and others to develop state-of-the-art climate modeling

- Launching the "National Climate Change Technology Initiative", tasking the Secretaries of Commerce and Energy to strengthen basic research and develop public-private partnerships to bring cutting edge technologies to market; and

- Increasing cooperative efforts within our hemisphere and globally, especially with developing countries, tasking the Secretary of State and others to build partnerships to measure and mitigate emissions, undertake research, and invest in forestation.

➢ The President directed the Cabinet-level climate change working group to consider approaches to reduce greenhouse gas emissions, drawing on the power of markets and the promise of technology. That effort will be guided by several basic principles:

- The approach must be consistent with the long-term goal of stabilizing concentrations of greenhouse gases in the atmosphere.
- Our actions should be measured, as we learn more and build on it.
- Our approach must be flexible to adjust to new information and take advantage of new technology.
- We must ensure continued economic growth in the U.S. and the world.
- We should pursue market-based incentives and spur technological innovation.
- And our approach must be based on global participation, including developing countries.

➢ The President directed Secretary Powell and EPA Administrator Whitman to work actively with friends and allies to explore common approaches to climate change consistent with these principles.

Scientists' Report Doesn't
Support the Kyoto Treaty
By Richard S. Lindzen. Mr. Lindzen, a professor of meteorology at MIT, was a member of the National Academy of Sciences panel on climate change.
Last week the National Academy of Sciences released a report on climate change, prepared in response to a request from the White House, that was depicted in the press as an implicit endorsement of the Kyoto Protocol. CNN's Michelle Mitchell was typical of the coverage when she declared that the report represented "a unanimous decision that global warming is real, is getting worse, and is due to man. There is no wiggle room."
As one of 11 scientists who prepared the report, I can state that this is simply untrue. For starters, the NAS never asks that all participants agree to all elements of a report, but rather that the report represent the span of views. This the full report did, making clear that there is no consensus, unanimous or otherwise, about long-term climate trends and what causes them.
As usual, far too much public attention was paid to the hastily prepared summary rather than to the body of the report. The summary began with a zinger -- that greenhouse gases are accumulating in Earth's atmosphere as a result of human activities, causing surface air temperatures and subsurface ocean temperatures to rise, etc., before following with the necessary qualifications. For example, the full text noted that 20 years was too short a period for estimating long-term trends, but the summary forgot to mention this.
Our primary conclusion was that despite some knowledge and agreement, the science is by no means settled. We are quite confident (1) that global mean temperature is about 0.5 degrees Celsius higher than it was a century ago; (2) that atmospheric levels of carbon dioxide have risen over the past two centuries; and (3) that carbon dioxide is a greenhouse gas whose increase is likely to warm the earth (one of many, the most important being water vapor and clouds).
But -- and I cannot stress this enough -- we are not in a position to confidently attribute past climate change to carbon dioxide or to forecast what the climate will be in the future. That is to say, contrary to media impressions, agreement with the three basic statements tells us almost nothing relevant to policy discussions.
One reason for this uncertainty is that, as the report states, the climate is always changing; change is the norm. Two centuries ago, much of the Northern Hemisphere was emerging from a little ice age. A millennium ago, during the Middle Ages, the same region was in a warm period. Thirty years ago, we were concerned with global cooling.
Distinguishing the small recent changes in global mean temperature from the natural variability, which is unknown, is not a trivial task. All attempts so far make the assumption that existing computer climate models simulate natural variability, but I doubt that anyone really believes this assumption.
We simply do not know what relation, if any, exists between global climate changes and water vapor, clouds, storms, hurricanes, and other factors, including regional climate changes, which are generally much larger than global changes and not correlated with them. Nor do we know how to predict changes in greenhouse gases. This is because we cannot forecast economic and technological change over the next century, and also because there are many man-made substances whose properties and levels are not well known, but which could be comparable in importance to carbon dioxide.

What we do is know that a doubling of carbon dioxide by itself would produce only a modest temperature increase of one degree Celsius. Larger projected increases depend on "amplification" of the carbon dioxide by more important, but poorly modeled, greenhouse gases, clouds and water vapor.

The press has frequently tied the existence of climate change to a need for Kyoto. The NAS panel did not address this question. My own view, consistent with the panel's work, is that the Kyoto Protocol would not result in a substantial reduction in global warming. Given the difficulties in significantly limiting levels of atmospheric carbon dioxide, a more effective policy might well focus on other greenhouse substances whose potential for reducing global warming in a short time may be greater.

The panel was finally asked to evaluate the work of the United Nations' Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, focusing on the Summary for Policymakers, the only part ever read or quoted. The Summary for Policymakers, which is seen as endorsing Kyoto, is commonly presented as the consensus of thousands of the world's foremost climate scientists.

Within the confines of professional courtesy, the NAS panel essentially concluded that the IPCC's Summary for Policymakers does not provide suitable guidance for the U.S. government.

The full IPCC report is an admirable description of research activities in climate science, but it is not specifically directed at policy. The Summary for Policymakers is, but it is also a very different document. It represents a consensus of government representatives (many of whom are also their nations' Kyoto representatives), rather than of scientists. The resulting document has a strong tendency to disguise uncertainty, and conjures up some scary scenarios for which there is no evidence.

Science, in the public arena, is commonly used as a source of authority with which to bludgeon political opponents and propagandize uninformed citizens. This is what has been done with both the reports of the IPCC and the NAS. It is a reprehensible practice that corrodes our ability to make rational decisions. A fairer view of the science will show that there is still a vast amount of uncertainty -- far more than advocates of Kyoto would like to acknowledge -- and that the NAS report has hardly ended the debate. Nor was it meant to.

Introduction

Three months ago, the President directed a Cabinet-level review of U.S. climate change policy. Members of the Cabinet, the Vice President, and senior White House staff have been meeting to examine the science, technologies, current U.S. efforts, and a wide range of innovative options for addressing concentrations of greenhouse gases in the atmosphere.

During that time, the Cabinet-level climate change working group has held regular and intensive sessions and has heard from many experts representing a wide range of views. To obtain the most recent information and a balanced view of what we know and do not know about the science of climate change, the working group requested a report from the National Academy of Sciences. The report outlines areas supported by the science and significant gaps in our knowledge of climate change.

The following material contains the initial findings of the working group: summaries of current U.S. actions, an analysis of the Kyoto Protocol, and proposals to advance the science, advance technologies, and create partnerships in the Western Hemisphere and throughout the world to address climate change.

The President has directed the Cabinet-level climate change working group to press forward and develop innovative approaches in accordance with several basic principles. These approaches should: (1) be consistent with the long-term goal of stabilizing greenhouse gas concentrations in the atmosphere; (2) be measured, as we learn more from science and build on it; (3) be flexible to adjust to new information and take advantage of new technology; (4) ensure continued economic growth and prosperity; (5) pursue market-based incentives and spur technological innovation; and (6) be based on global participation, including developing countries.

The Cabinet-level climate change working group will continue its review consistent with these principles.

CURRENT U.S. ACTIONS TO ADDRESS CLIMATE CHANGE

"The earth's well-being is also an issue important to America – and it's an issue that should be important to every nation and in every part of the world. My Administration is committed to a leadership role on the issue of climate change. We recognize our responsibility and we will meet it, at home, in our hemisphere, and in the world."

--President George W. Bush

Executive Summary

The United States government is currently pursuing a broad range of strategies to reduce emissions of greenhouse gases in the major greenhouse gas emitting sectors of our economy:

- Electricity -- Federal programs promote greenhouse gas reductions through the development of cleaner, more efficient technologies for electricity generation and transmission. The government is also supporting the development of renewable resources, such as solar energy, wind power, geothermal energy, hydropower, bio-energy, and hydrogen.
- Transportation -- The United States is currently promoting the development of fuel-efficient motor vehicles and trucks, researching options for producing cleaner fuels, and implementing programs to reduce the number of vehicle miles traveled.
- Industry -- The United States is implementing many partnership programs with industry to reduce emissions of carbon dioxide (CO_2) and other greenhouse gases, to promote source reduction and recycling, and to increase the use of combined heat and power.
- Buildings -- Federal voluntary partnership programs promote energy efficiency in the nation's commercial, residential, and government buildings (including schools) by offering technical assistance as well as the labeling of efficient products, efficient new homes, and efficient office buildings.
- Agriculture and Forestry -- The Federal government is implementing conservation programs that have the benefit of sequestering carbon in soils and off-setting agricultural emissions of greenhouse gases.
- The Federal Government – The Federal Government has taken steps to reduce greenhouse gas emissions from energy use in Federal buildings and in the Federal transportation fleet.
- The National Energy Policy – The National Energy Policy includes new recommendations to promote energy efficiency, conservation, increased use of natural gas and renewable energy, and the new construction of nuclear capacity.

United States government climate change programs are achieving real results, helping to reduce greenhouse gas emissions by 66 million metric tons of carbon equivalent in 2000. United States carbon intensity – the amount of CO2 emitted per unit of GDP – declined 15% from 1990 to 1999.

In addition, businesses, state and local governments, and non-governmental organizations are addressing global climate change – by improving the measurement and reporting of greenhouse gas emission reductions; through voluntary reductions, including emissions trading; and actions to sequester carbon through tree planting and forest preservation, restoration and management.

The Federal Government

The U.S. government is currently pursuing a broad range of strategies to reduce emissions of greenhouse gases, including:

- Voluntary public-private partnership programs that promote energy efficiency and the broader use of renewable energy;
- Research and development (R&D) investments and tax incentives to increase energy efficiency and the broader use of renewable energy;
- Appliance standards that increase the minimum level of efficiency of products on the market;
- Financial incentives such as grants to states and localities; and
- Programs to reduce greenhouse gas emissions from Federal buildings and transportation fleets.

These programs are achieving real reductions in greenhouse gas emissions – the U.S. government estimates that its existing climate change programs reduced emissions by 66 million metric tons of carbon equivalent (MMTCE) in 2000[1], approximately 2.7% of total emissions. The amount of CO2 emitted per unit of GDP declined 15% from 1990 to 1999.[2]

The following sections highlight illustrative programs in the major greenhouse gas emitting sectors of the economy: the electric power industry (32% of total U.S. greenhouse gas emissions); transportation (27%); other industry (21%); residential and commercial buildings (13%); and agriculture and forestry (net 7%) (unlike other sectors of the economy, agricultural and forestry activities can actively remove carbon dioxide from the atmosphere).[3]

Electricity

Federal programs promote greenhouse gas reductions through the development of cleaner, more efficient technologies for electricity generation and transmission. For example, the Environmental Protection Agency/Department of Energy Combined Heat and Power Challenge program has the goal of doubling U.S. combined heat and power capacity by 2010 by providing technical assistance and addressing regulatory issues where possible.

The Federal government is also supporting renewable resources such as solar energy, wind power, geothermal energy, hydropower, bio-energy, and hydrogen. For example, the Department of Energy supports the development of a wide range of solar and renewable energy technology, seeking to improve their reliability, expand their applicability, and reduce their costs. These activities have been very successful in bringing down technology costs. The cost of producing photo-voltaic modules has decreased 50 percent since 1991, and the cost of wind power has decreased 85 percent since 1980. Commercial success has been achieved for both of these areas in certain applications.

Transportation

The U.S. is currently promoting the development of fuel-efficient motor vehicles and trucks, researching options for producing cleaner fuels, and implementing programs to reduce the number of vehicle miles traveled. For example, through the Partnership for a New Generation of Vehicles (PNGV) program, the research has directly led to the commercial introduction of new hybrid vehicles and soon hydrogen as well. Commercialization of such vehicles could cut fuel use and carbon emissions for individual vehicles significantly and could lay the foundation for large, long-term fuel and carbon benefits. If 10% of the on-road vehicle fleet utilized PNGV technologies, the aggregate emission reductions could be approximately 20 million metric tons of carbon equivalent per year. The program is being extended to sport utility vehicles and other light trucks which, because of their lower baseline fuel economies, have the potential for even greater overall fuel and carbon savings per vehicle.

Industry

The U.S. government is implementing many partnership programs with industry to reduce emissions of carbon dioxide (CO_2) and other greenhouse gases, to promote source reduction and recycling, and to increase the use of combined heat and power. For example, current voluntary partnerships directed toward eliminating market barriers to the profitable collection and use of methane that otherwise would be released to the atmosphere are expected to hold methane emissions at or below 1990 levels through 2010. Since the launch of EPA's Voluntary Aluminum Industrial Partnership in 1995, the program's membership has grown to include 22 of the nation's 23 aluminum smelters, representing 94% of U.S. production capacity. As of 2000, program partners cumulatively achieved a 45% reduction in perfluorocarbon (a high global warming potential gas) emissions from 1990 levels.[4]

Commercial and Residential Buildings

Partnership programs promote energy efficiency in the nation's commercial, residential, and government buildings (including schools) by offering technical assistance as well as the labeling of efficient products, efficient new homes, and efficient office buildings. As one example, the

[4] The Power of Partnerships: Energy Star and Other Voluntary Programs, 2000 Annual Report of the Climate Protection Partnerships Division, U.S. EPA, Summer 2001.

EPA/DOE Energy Star program collaborates with a wide range of building owners and users -- retailers, real estate investors, small businesses, governments and schools. Each partner commits to improve the energy performance of its facilities and the most efficient buildings are awarded the Energy Star label. More than 16% of the U.S. commercial, public, and industrial building market is enrolled in Energy Star. Nationwide, Energy Star has eliminated the need for over 10,000 megawatts of peak generating capacity – equivalent to 20 large (50 MW) power plants.[5]

Agriculture and Forestry

The Federal government is conducting research into methods to reduce emissions of methane and nitrous oxide from agriculture, and is implementing conservation programs that have the benefit of sequestering carbon in soils and forests. For example, USDA's Conservation Reserve Program (CRP) has taken over 36 million acres of environmentally sensitive crop land out of production. CRP provides long-term environmental benefits, including the offset of up to 12 MMTCE each year.[6]

The Federal Government

The Federal Government has taken steps to reduce greenhouse gas emissions from energy use in Federal buildings and in the Federal transportation fleet by:

- Requiring all Federal agencies to take steps to cut greenhouse gas emissions from energy use in buildings by 30% below 1990 levels by 2010.
- Directing Federal agencies in Washington, D.C. to offer to their employees up to $65 per month in transit and van pool benefits.
- Requiring Federal agencies to implement strategies to reduce their fleet's annual petroleum consumption by 20% relative to 1999 consumption levels and to use alternative fuels a majority of the time.

Businesses, States and Communities, and Non-Governmental Organizations

Businesses, states and local governments, and non-governmental organizations are also moving forward to address global climate change -- through programs to improve the measurement and reporting of emission reductions; through voluntary programs, including emissions trading programs; and through sequestration programs. For example:

- Under the Voluntary Reporting of Greenhouse Gases program, provided by Section 1605(b) of the Energy Policy Act of 1992, more than 200 companies voluntarily reported to the Department of Energy their voluntary measures to reduce, avoid or sequester greenhouse gas emissions, principally carbon dioxide.[7] These companies undertook 1,715 projects and achieved greenhouse gas emission reductions and carbon sequestration equivalent to 61.5 MMTCE, or about 3.4 percent of 1999 total U.S. greenhouse gas emissions.[8]

- Electric Utilities: Several companies have committed to reducing greenhouse gas emissions. Measures include:

  - ✓ Improved generation efficiency (seasonal use of natural gas, hydroelectric turbine replacements, expanded capacity, shortened outage schedules at nuclear plants);
  - ✓ Improved pipeline, transmission and distribution equipment efficiencies (including reducing leaks);
  - ✓ Increased use of renewables (wind, biomass and solar);
  - ✓ Improved home and office energy efficiencies (low-income weatherization, home energy audits, inefficient refrigerator and freezer removal and recycling, installation of advanced energy management systems, planting trees, and retrofitting energy efficient lighting in company buildings); and
  - ✓ Investments in more efficient technologies (programs to install geothermal heat pumps, commercialize emerging energy efficient and renewable energy technologies, accelerate introduction of electric vehicles into the marketplace, and enhance carbon sequestration).

- Oil and Gas: Some oil and gas companies have added greenhouse gas reductions to their list of corporate priorities. One company intends to reduce its greenhouse gases by 10% by 2002 (over 1990 levels), and another company is seeking to reduce by 10% by 2010. To do this, the company is adopting an internal system of company-wide emissions trading to meet its goal in the most cost-effective way possible. Significant gains can be made from such measures as reducing flaring and leaking.

- Auto Manufacturers: Auto manufacturers have announced production plans for hybrid gas and electric vehicles in 2003 or 2004 and have pledged to increase their sport utility vehicles' fuel economy by 25% by 2005.

- Chemicals: A chemicals trade association supports voluntary programs and its members' actions to improve energy efficiency and reduce greenhouse gases. For example, one company says it will reduce its greenhouse gas emissions by 65% (by 2010, over 1990 levels). It already has cut its global emissions by 45% by making major process-change investments (reducing nitrous oxides), by holding energy consumption flat even with tremendous production growth (with powerhouse and process efficiencies), and increased use of renewable energy. Another company is working to reduce energy use by 20% per unit of production by 2005.

- Non-Governmental Organizations. Several non-governmental organizations and coalitions have initiated partnership programs with large global corporations to reduce emissions of greenhouse gases, and promote the use of energy conservation, renewable energy sources, and efficient technologies. Non-governmental organizations also are working with companies to support forestry projects that sequester carbon through tree planting and forest preservation, restoration and management.

[8] DOE/EIA-0608 (1999), Annual Report of the Voluntary Reporting of Greenhouse Gases, February 12, 2001.

- States. More than 25 states have initiated state-based action plans to reduce greenhouse gas emissions. Some states are using market-based mechanisms to achieve reductions. For example, the State of New Jersey has established a 3.5% statewide reduction goal and is developing voluntary agreements with various businesses.

The National Energy Policy

The National Energy Policy includes numerous recommendations to promote energy efficiency and conservation and to reduce emissions of greenhouse gases through the use of alternative, renewable, and cleaner forms of energy.[9] These recommendations include:

Efficiency and Conservation Measures

- Tax incentives and other initiatives to promote the use of combined heat and power.

  The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of the Treasury to work with Congress to encourage increased energy efficiency through combined heat and power (CHP) projects by shortening the depreciation life for CHP projects or providing an investment tax credit.

  The NEPD Group also recommended that the President direct the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) to work with local and state governments to promote the use of well-designed CHP and other clean power generation at brownfields sites, consistent with the local communities' interests. EPA will also work to clarify liability issues if they are raised at a particular site.

  The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the EPA Administrator to promote CHP through flexibility in environmental permitting.

- Reviewing and providing recommendations on establishing CAFE standards as well as other market-based approaches to increase the national average fuel economy of new motor vehicles.

  The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of Transportation to:

  - ✓ Review and provide recommendations on establishing Corporate Average Fuel Economy (CAFE) standards with due consideration of the National Academy of Sciences study to be released in July 2001. Responsibly crafted CAFE standards should increase efficiency without negatively impacting the U.S. automotive industry. The determination of future fuel economy standards must therefore be addressed analytically and based on sound science.

[9] National Energy Policy: Report of the National Energy Policy Development Group, May 2001.

- ✓ Consider passenger safety, economic concerns, and disparate impact on the U.S. versus foreign fleets of automobiles.
- ✓ Look at other market-based approaches to increasing the national average fuel economy of new motor vehicles.

➢ Directing all agencies to use technological advances to better protect our environment.

The Administration remains committed to investing in Intelligent Transportation Systems (ITS) and encourages the private sector to invest in ITS applications. This Department of Transportation (DOT) program funds the development of improved transportation infrastructure that will reduce congestion, such as traveler information/navigation systems, freeway management, and electronic toll collection. ITS applications reduce fuel associated with travel.

The Administration remains committed to the DOT's fuel-cell-powered transit bus program, authored by the Transportation Equity Act for the 21st Century (TEA-21). This program demonstrates the viability of fuel-cell power plants for transit bus applications.

The Administration remains committed to the Clean Buses program. TEA-21 establishes a new clean fuel formula grant program, which provides an opportunity to accelerate the introduction of advanced bus propulsion technologies into the mainstream of the nation's transit fleet.

➢ Promoting energy efficiency, including expanding the Energy Star program.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of Energy to conduct a review of current funding and historic performance of energy efficiency research and development programs in light of the recommendations of this report. In addition, the NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Office of Science and Technology Policy and the President's Council of Advisors on Science and Technology to review and make recommendations on using the nation's energy resources more efficiently.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of Energy to promote greater energy efficiency:

- ✓ Expand the Energy Star program beyond office buildings to include schools, retail buildings, health care facilities, and homes.
- ✓ Extend the Energy Star labeling program to additional products, appliances, and services.
- ✓ Strengthen Department of Energy public education programs relating to energy efficiency.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the EPA Administrator to develop and implement a strategy to increase public awareness of the sizable savings that energy efficiency offers to homeowners across the country.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of Energy to establish a national priority for improving energy efficiency. The priority would be to improve the energy intensity of the U.S. economy as measured by the amount of energy required for each dollar of economic productivity. This increased efficiency should be pursued through the combined efforts of industry, consumers, and federal, state, and local governments.

- Conserving energy at federal facilities.

  The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct heads of executive departments and agencies to take appropriate actions to conserve energy use at their facilities to the maximum extent consistent with the effective discharge of public responsibilities.

- Improving and expanding appliance standards.

  The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of Energy to improve the energy efficiency of appliances:

  - ✓ Support the appliance standards program for covered products, setting higher standards where technologically feasible and economically justified.
  - ✓ Expand the scope of the appliance standards program, setting standards for additional appliances where technologically feasible and economically justified.

- Promoting congestion mitigation technologies.

  The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of Transportation to review and promote congestion mitigation technologies and strategies and work with Congress on legislation to implement these strategies.

- Reducing demand for transportation fuels by establishing a ground freight management program.

  The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the EPA and DOT to develop ways to reduce demand for petroleum transportation fuels. These agencies will work with the trucking industry to establish a program to reduce emissions and fuel consumption from long-haul trucks at truck stops by implementing alternatives to idling, such as electrification and auxiliary power units at truck stops along interstate highways. EPA and DOT will develop partnership agreements with trucking fleets, truck stops, and manufacturers of idle-reducing technologies (e.g., portable auxiliary packs, electrification) to install and use low-emission-idling technologies.

Alternative, Renewable, and Clean Forms of Energy

- Increasing America's use of renewable and alternative energy

  The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretaries of the Interior and Energy to re-evaluate access limitations to federal lands in order to increase renewable energy production, such as biomass, wind, geothermal, and solar.

The NEPD Group supported the increase of $39.2 million in the FY 2002 budget amendment for the Department of Energy's Energy Supply account that would provide increased support for research and development of renewable energy resources.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of Energy to conduct a review of current funding and historic performance of renewable energy and alternative energy research and development programs. Based on this review, the Secretary of Energy is then directed to propose appropriate funding of those research and development programs that are performance-based and are modeled as public-private partnerships.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of the Treasury to work with Congress to develop legislation to provide for a temporary income tax credit available for the purchase of new hybrid or fuel-cell vehicles between 2002 and 2007.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of the Treasury to work with Congress on legislation to expand the section 29 tax credit to make it available for new landfill methane projects. The credit could be tiered, depending on whether a landfill is already required by federal law to collect and flare its methane emissions due to local air pollution concerns.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of the Interior to determine ways to reduce the delays in geothermal lease processing as part of the permitting review process.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of the Treasury to work with Congress on legislation to extend and expand tax credits for electricity produced using wind and biomass. The President's budget request extends the present 1.7 cents per kilowatt hour tax credit for electricity produced from wind and biomass; expands eligible biomass sources to include forest-related sources, agricultural sources, and certain urban sources; and allows a credit for electricity produced from biomass co-fired with coal.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of the Treasury to work with Congress on legislation to provide a new 15 percent tax credit for residential solar energy property, up to a maximum credit of $2,000.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of the Treasury to work with Congress to continue the ethanol excise tax exemption.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of Energy to develop next-generation technology—including hydrogen and fusion:

- ✓ Develop an education campaign that communicates the benefits of alternative forms of energy, including hydrogen and fusion.

- ✓ Focus research and development efforts on integrating current programs regarding hydrogen, fuel cells, and distributed energy.
- ✓ Support legislation reauthorizing the Hydrogen Energy Act.

- Promoting new construction of nuclear capacity that could significantly reduce future greenhouse gas emissions.

  The NEPD Group recommended that the President support the expansion of nuclear energy in the United States as a major component of our national energy policy. Following are specific components of the recommendation:

  - ✓ Encourage the Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC) to ensure that safety and environmental protection are high priorities as they prepare to evaluate and expedite applications for licensing new advanced-technology nuclear reactors.
  - ✓ Encourage the NRC to facilitate efforts by utilities to expand nuclear energy generation in the United States by uprating existing nuclear plants safely.
  - ✓ Encourage the NRC to relicense existing nuclear plants that meet or exceed safety standards.
  - ✓ Direct the Secretary of Energy and the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency to assess the potential of nuclear energy to improve air quality.
  - ✓ Increase resources as necessary for nuclear safety enforcement in light of the potential increase in generation.
  - ✓ Use the best science to provide a deep geologic repository for nuclear waste.
  - ✓ Support legislation clarifying that qualified funds set aside by plant owners for eventual decommissioning will not be taxed as part of the transaction.
  - ✓ Support legislation to extend the Price–Anderson Act.

- Market-based three pollutant strategy

  The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the EPA Administrator to work with Congress to propose legislation that would establish a flexible, market-based program to significantly reduce and cap emissions of sulfur dioxide, nitrogen oxides, and mercury from electric power generators. Such a program (with appropriate measures to address local concerns) would provide significant public health benefits, including ancillary carbon benefits, even as we increase electricity supplies.

  - ✓ Establish mandatory reduction targets for emissions of three main pollutants: sulfur dioxide, nitrogen oxides, and mercury.
  - ✓ Phase in reductions over a reasonable period of time, similar to the successful acid rain reduction program established by the 1990 amendments to the Clean Air Act.
  - ✓ Provide regulatory certainty to allow utilities to make modifications to their plants without fear of new litigation.

- ✓ Provide market-based incentives, such as emissions trading credits to help achieve the required reductions.

- Increasing research in clean coal technologies.

  The NEPD recommended that the President direct the Department of Energy to continue to develop advanced clean coal technology:

  - ✓ Investing $2 billion over 10 years to fund research in clean coal technologies.
  - ✓ Supporting a permanent extension of the existing research and development tax credit.
  - ✓ Directing federal agencies to explore regulatory approaches that will encourage advancements in environmental technology.

An Analysis of the Kyoto Protocol

"The Kyoto Protocol was fatally flawed in fundamental ways. But the process used to bring nations together to discuss our joint response to climate change is an important one."

– President George W. Bush

The Kyoto Protocol is fundamentally flawed. The Kyoto Protocol fails to establish a long-term goal based on science, poses serious and unnecessary risks to the U.S. and world economies, and is ineffective in addressing climate change because it excludes major parts of the world.

The Kyoto Protocol is ineffective in addressing climate change because it excludes developing countries. The Kyoto Protocol's emission reduction requirements apply only to industrialized countries. Developing countries can continue business as usual under the Kyoto Protocol, despite their rapidly growing emissions:

- Current data indicate that developing countries' net emissions (including emissions and uptake from land use activities) have already exceeded those of the developed world.[10]

- Moreover, annual developing country emissions of CO_2 will double between 1990 and 2010 – an increase that represents over twice as many tons as all of the reductions the United States would be required to take under the Kyoto Protocol.[11]

The Kyoto Protocol's targets are not based on science. Its targets and timetables were arrived at arbitrarily as a result of political negotiations, and are not related to any specific scientific information or long-term objective.

The Kyoto Protocol targets are precipitous. Under the Kyoto Protocol, the emission reduction target for the United States is 7% from 1990 levels for each year from 2008-2012. However, the figure of 7% is misleading, because it does not take into account growth in emissions between 1990 and 2012. The actual reduction from the U.S. current emissions trajectory for this period is over 30%.[12] In other words, meeting its target would require the United States to reduce its output of greenhouse emissions by one third in less than seven years. This would require U.S. firms to retire large amounts of capital stock prematurely, imposing substantial and unnecessary costs on the U.S. economy. The Kyoto Protocol also does not allow countries to count legitimate mitigation activities. In fact, it restricts the use of carbon sequestration as a means of achieving its objectives. Moreover, it does not address substances that impact climate change, such as black carbon and tropospheric ozone, reductions of which would also have significant health benefits.

[12] United States submission to the UNFCCC, 2001

The Kyoto Protocol risks significantly harming the U.S. and global economies. The Kyoto Protocol would require the United States to meet its target no matter what the cost, which could be substantial:

- Most models suggest a reduction in U.S. GDP of 1% to 2% by 2010 as a result of Kyoto without emissions trading.[13] A 2% reduction is comparable to the impact of the oil shock of the 1970s.

- A U.S. Department of Energy model suggests a reduction of as much as 4%[14] in GDP under a scenario in which the United States does not establish implementing regulations before 2005 and does not engage in emissions trading. Under such a scenario, the U.S. economy could be transformed from one of strong growth to recession, with potentially significant repercussions for the global economy.

Other major industrial countries also have very stringent targets. The difficulties many countries will have in meeting their targets raises serious questions about the viability of the Kyoto Protocol framework.

The Kyoto Protocol would leave the United States dangerously dependent on other countries to meet its emission targets. Under the Kyoto Protocol's emissions trading system, countries are allowed to buy and sell part of their emissions allowances. Most economic models indicate that achieving reductions through emissions trading with other countries may cost about half of what it would cost to achieve the same reductions domestically under the Kyoto Protocol.[15] Many analysts have pointed to trading as the only way that the United States could meet its Kyoto target. Yet few countries will have many excess tons to sell other than Russia and several other Eastern European countries that negotiated targets well above their expected emissions during the period 2008-2012. There is no guarantee that these allowances would be available:

- In order to sell allowances, countries must meet measuring and monitoring requirements. Some countries with excess emissions are far from meeting these requirements now, and it is likely that the United States and other countries would not know until at least 2007 whether they could meet their requirements. This creates enormous uncertainty about the cost of meeting the Kyoto Protocol until well after the United States has assumed its obligations.

- Even if these countries met their requirements and were allowed to sell their emission allowances, U.S. purchases of allowances would amount to many billions of dollars of financial transfers annually – without achieving any meaningful greenhouse gas emission reductions or climate benefit.

Advancing Technology to Address Climate Change

"America is a leader in technology and innovation. We all believe technology offers great promise to significantly reduce emissions. So we are creating the 'National Climate Change Technology Initiative.' "

– President George W. Bush

Executive Summary

New technologies hold the promise of increasing our supply of energy more efficiently and more cleanly. Technology has also played and will continue to play an important role in reducing greenhouse gas emissions and controlling costs. Because greenhouse gas emissions come from many sectors of the economy, a wide variety of technologies will be needed. A portfolio of technologies to address climate change could include energy efficient technologies; lower carbon-emitting technologies; carbon capture, storage and sequestration technologies; and new technological discoveries yet to be made.

To advance the technology across each of these areas, President Bush will create the National Climate Change Technology Initiative. The President is charging the Secretaries of Commerce and Energy, working with other agencies, to:

- Evaluate the current state of U.S. climate change technology research and development and make recommendations for improvements.
- Provide guidance on strengthening basic research at universities and national laboratories, including the development of the advanced mitigation technologies that offer the greatest promise for low-cost reductions of greenhouse gas emissions.
- Develop opportunities to enhance private-public partnerships in applied research and development to expedite innovative and cost-effective approaches to reduce greenhouse gas emissions.
- Make recommendations for funding demonstration projects for cutting-edge technologies.
- Develop improved technologies for measuring and monitoring gross and net greenhouse gas emissions.

The National Climate Change Technology Initiative also will enhance coordination across federal agencies, and among the federal government, universities, and the private sector.

The Importance of Technology to Mitigate Climate Change

Technology will continue to play an important role in reducing greenhouse gas emissions and controlling costs. The long-term objective of the 1992 Framework Convention on Climate Change – to stabilize greenhouse gas concentrations in the atmosphere – can be addressed in two ways. First, by reducing emissions of greenhouse gases. Because greenhouse gases are emitted so broadly across society, no single technology appears to be sufficient to stabilize the increasing atmospheric greenhouse gas concentrations. Rather, a portfolio of technologies aimed at improving energy efficiency, and increasing the use of low carbon fuels will help to reduce greenhouse gas emissions and ultimately to stabilize concentrations.

Second, greenhouse gas concentrations can be addressed by means of capturing and sequestering gases, either at the source or after they have been released into the atmosphere. Limited carbon capture is occurring today, using currently available technologies. Continued research and development is needed to explore advanced chemical and biological mechanisms to remove carbon dioxide from the atmosphere.

General Investment Criteria

The Presidents of the National Academy of Sciences, National Academy of Engineering, and the Institute of Medicine have provided some general principles for government investment in technology. In "Preparing for the 21st Century: Science and Technology Policy in a New Era" (October 23, 1997), the Presidents of the Academies offered criteria for such investment, including:

- Direct government investments in science and technology should be focused on long-range, broadly useful research in basic technology and science, both of which produce benefits far in excess of what private sector entities can capture for themselves.

- The federal government should cooperate with the private sector so that the United States maintains a position of leadership in those technologies that promise to have a major and continuing impact on broad areas of industrial and economic performance.

- But the government need not invest in fields in which the private sector already has programs of development in place. Private firms have the primary responsibility for product development, but federal and state governments play an important role in enhancing the civilian technology base and its adoption through their economic, regulatory, and trade policies, their support for research and development, and their own procurement of technology.

- Maintaining U.S. leadership in science and technology despite budget constraints will require discipline in the allocation of resources for federal investments. Within the general constraints determined by national priorities, the selection of individual projects must reflect the highest standards of the scientific and technical community.

Assessing the Current State of U.S. Climate Change Technology Research

The U.S. government has funded research to develop several technologies that mitigate climate change. In general, these technologies are aimed at: increasing energy efficiency to reduce the amount of energy consumed for goods produced in the economy; creating opportunities to switch to fuels and products that emit relatively lower amounts of greenhouse gases; enhancing carbon removal and storage in terrestrial, ocean, and geological sinks; and exploring innovative concepts along unconventional paths to discover new ways to reduce greenhouse gas emissions, such as advanced biotechnology concepts.

In order to advance climate change technology research, President Bush will:

- Charge the Secretary of Commerce, the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, and the Secretary of Energy to evaluate the current state of U.S. climate change technology research and development and make recommendations for improvements.

Strengthening Basic Climate Change Technology Research

The development of certain climate change mitigation technologies may be impractical for the private sector. Such technologies have some unique characteristics, including instances where the:

- Benefits are too widely spread for any one company to recover its investment at a profit;
- Cost or risk is too great for any individual company to bear alone; or
- Potential benefits are too far in the future to pass the threshold of private investment criteria.

Yet these advanced concepts may have the greatest potential to reduce greenhouse gas emissions at very low cost. For example, technological advances in areas such as biotechnology offer the potential for dramatic innovations in many areas. An important technology is the development of bioreactors that can harness the potential of microbial communities, such as photosynthetic bacteria, to produce clean fuels such as hydrogen. These bioreactors can exploit our increasing understanding of the biochemical pathways of microbial communities. While these biotechnologies are currently producing higher value products, like pharmaceuticals, significant new scientific research will be required for the direct production of fuels.

Similarly, scientists have begun work on promising new technologies for the cost-effective capture and sequestration of carbon in terrestrial and marine ecosystems. These opportunities may provide other environmental benefits as well, such as improved soil quality, better retention of moisture and nutrients, and reduced soil erosion. Researchers at the Department of Energy, for example, are studying "mineral carbonization," a technique for turning gaseous CO_2 into an environmentally-benign mineral that could be used to refill mine pits in land reclamation efforts.

Research and development efforts to date show promise for several options. However, many options are still emerging concepts both in the United States and internationally. Estimates of their potential for mitigating climate change are large, but highly uncertain. Markets for these or other technologies will be developed if buyers have some assurance about the quantity and quality of the product they are purchasing. In addition, there are many scientific and technological challenges regarding costs, environmental impacts, and public acceptability that must be resolved before these climate mitigation technologies can reach their potential. How and how much to invest in these areas are questions that must be answered to ensure that we as a society can harness our technological resources and capabilities and find the most cost-effective and environmentally sound solutions to the risks posed by increasing atmospheric concentrations of greenhouse gases.

Therefore, President Bush has directed that the National Climate Change Technology Initiative will:

- Provide guidance on strengthening basic research at universities and national laboratories, including the development of the advanced mitigation technologies that offer the greatest promise for low-cost reductions of greenhouse gas emissions.

Enhancing Private-Public Partnerships

It is important to effectively use the technologies that are and will soon become available. For example, technologies designed to increase energy efficiency, such as industrial applications of combined heat and power (CHP), enable both the local generation of electricity and the efficient use of the byproduct heat. When the quantities of the heat and power produced are well matched to the requirements of an industrial plant or facility, total efficiency of the fuel utilization can reach 90 percent, avoiding significant emissions of CO_2.

Similarly, the United States can achieve significant reductions of energy consumption and the related emissions of greenhouse gases through building systems with integrated electronic sensors, "smart" windows, and computers to monitor, maintain, and manage building operations. Also, one of the most challenging and important elements of a comprehensive strategy to address long-term greenhouse gas emission reductions is to improve the efficiency of our transportation fleet. The development of higher efficiency, hybrid passenger vehicles is an important first step.

In addition to energy efficiency, there are opportunities to increase the use of fuels that emit fewer greenhouse gases. For example, increased use of biomass residues and development of herbaceous crops, like native American prairie switchgrass, can mitigate greenhouse gases from coal-fired power plants and reduce air toxic emissions. Similarly, biomass can be converted into simple chemicals and plastic substitutes from which a new chemical industry can be formed.

Currently, the Federal government has established partners in the private sector to advance these technologies. It is critical to enhance this role and ensure that partnerships with industry are directed toward the most mutually beneficial outcomes.

Therefore, President Bush has directed that the National Climate Change Technology Initiative will:

- Develop opportunities to enhance private-public partnerships in applied research and development to expedite innovative and cost-effective approaches to reduce greenhouse gas emissions.

Promoting Cutting Edge Technology

Cutting-edge technologies hold the promise of helping to reduce emissions of greenhouse gases. For instance, geothermal power plants have a proven record of performance for producing reliable base-load power with minimal environmental effects. However, substantial known resources have not been tapped. Advanced technology is being developed to make more geothermal resources economical over a larger portion of the country. In response to the electricity shortages in the West, a demonstration of the economic and environmental benefits of the next generation of geothermal power plant technology, such as improved condensers and heat exchangers, will spur new development. As much as 100 to 300 megawatts of additional geothermal power to replace combustion-fired facilities will become available at new and existing plants within the next two years.

Fuel cells, a product of America's space program, hold great promise for reducing emissions. As noted in the National Energy Policy, the first generation fuel cells for stationary power applications entered commercial markets in 1995 and the second generation is currently in the demonstration phase. Innovative demonstration projects will reduce the high cost of this technology and offer a great potential to meet our energy needs.

Therefore, President Bush has directed that the National Climate Change Technology Initiative will:

- Make recommendations for funding demonstration projects for cutting-edge technologies.

Technology for Measuring and Monitoring Gross and Net Emissions

A fundamental challenge in attracting private sector investment to land-based greenhouse gas emission reduction or carbon sequestration projects is the ability to accurately quantify the net changes. Private sector investors are reluctant to participate in projects without reliable and credible quantification of the uncertainties associated with different land management practices. Cost effective measurement systems will not only increase the attractiveness of agricultural greenhouse gas projects to investors, but can also provide valuable information to individual farmers and ranchers in optimizing the use of fuel, fertilizers and other substances.

Significant advances in the science of remote sensing, coupled with land-based measurements, create new opportunities to monitor and verify greenhouse gas emissions. New and improved sensors that can be mounted on earth observing satellites and high altitude aircraft can deliver a unique capability to regularly monitor greenhouse gases with high accuracy, including carbon dioxide, methane, and ozone. This effort requires collaboration between the federal government and the private sector.

Therefore, President Bush has directed that the National Climate Change Technology Initiative will:

- Develop improved technologies for measuring and monitoring gross and net greenhouse gas emissions.

ADVANCING THE SCIENCE OF CLIMATE CHANGE

"MY CABINET-LEVEL WORKING GROUP HAS MET REGULARLY FOR THE LAST TEN WEEKS TO REVIEW THE MOST RECENT, MOST ACCURATE, AND MOST COMPREHENSIVE SCIENCE. THEY HAVE HEARD FROM SCIENTISTS OFFERING A WIDE SPECTRUM OF VIEWS; THEY HAVE REVIEWED THE FACTS, AND THEY HAVE LISTENED TO MANY THEORIES AND SUPPOSITIONS. THE WORKING GROUP ASKED THE HIGHLY RESPECTED NATIONAL ACADEMY OF SCIENCES TO PROVIDE US THE MOST UP-TO-DATE INFORMATION ABOUT WHAT IS KNOWN – AND WHAT IS NOT KNOWN – ON THE SCIENCE OF CLIMATE CHANGE…THE UNITED STATES [WILL] HELP LEAD THE WAY BY ADVANCING THE SCIENCE ON CLIMATE CHANGE."

-- PRESIDENT
GEORGE W. BUSH

Executive Summary

The United States leads the world in climate change research, spending more than the 15 nations of the European Union and Japan combined. Over the past decade, the United States has invested nearly $18 billion in such research and has increased our understanding of changes in climate, human links to these changes, and possible consequences.

To have the most up-to-date information of what is known and unknown about the science of climate change, the Cabinet-level climate change working group requested a report from the National Academy of Sciences (NAS). The NAS report identified substantial uncertainty in critical areas, such as:

- The feedbacks in the climate system that determine the magnitude and rate of temperature increases;
- The future usage of fossil fuels and the future emissions of methane;
- How much carbon is sequestered by oceans and other sinks and how much remains in the atmosphere;
- The details of regional climate change resulting from global climate change;
- The nature and causes of the natural variability of climate, its interactions with forced changes, and the direct and indirect effects of aerosols.

The National Academy of Sciences concluded, "[m]aking progress in reducing the large uncertainties in projections of future climate will require addressing a number of fundamental scientific questions relating to the buildup of greenhouse gases in the atmosphere and the behavior of the climate system."

To ensure that policies are shaped, and continue to be shaped, by the best science, President Bush will work aggressively to advance the science of climate change. Today, the President is announcing the U.S. Climate Change Research Initiative, which:

- Directs the Secretary of Commerce, working with other agencies, to set priorities for additional investments in climate change research, to review such investments, and to maximize coordination among federal agencies;
- Fully funds all priority research areas that the Secretary of Commerce's review finds are underfunded or need to be accelerated relative to other research;

- Challenges the major greenhouse gas emitting countries to increase significantly their investments in high priority areas of climate change research;
- Provides up to $25 million, and calls on other developed countries to provide matching funds, to help build climate observation systems in developing countries; and

- Proposes a joint venture with the EU, Japan and others to develop state-of-the-art climate modeling to help us better predict the causes and consequences of climate change.

U.S. Climate Research to Date

U.S. Global Change Research Program

The United States leads the world in climate change research, spending approximately $1.6 billion annually. The United States is responsible for half of the world's annual climate change research expenditures, three times more than the next largest contributor and larger than the contributions of Japan and all 15 nations of the European Union combined.

The U.S. Global Change Research Program (USGCRP) is a national research program that coordinates most of the federal government's research on climate change. Definition of the program began under the Reagan Administration; the program became a presidential initiative under President George Bush, and was codified by Congress in the Global Change Research Act of 1990.

Since its establishment in 1990, USGCRP has spent approximately $18 billion. The President's fiscal year 2002 budget requests $1.6 billion for USGCRP. One half of this investment is devoted to climate change science and the other half to associated satellite systems. During its first decade, USGCRP research activities have identified a series of global scale changes, including ozone depletion, climate change, and land cover change. USGCRP has also explored and categorized likely human links to these changes, improved forecasts of the El Nino-Southern Oscillation, and increased understanding of other climate changes. The USGCRP has also developed and deployed a series of remote sensing satellites that could form the basis of a global environmental observing system, and has developed models to analyze the climate process and produce scenarios of potential future climate change and possible consequences.

The USGCRP currently conducts research and observations in the following areas: Understanding the Earth's Climate System; Composition and Chemistry of the Atmosphere; Global Water Cycle; Carbon Cycle Science; Biology and Biochemistry of Ecosystems; Human Dimensions of Global Change; and Paleoenvironment/Paleoclimate (analysis of prehistoric changes in climate). Ten federal agencies participate in the USGCRP and their respective roles are described in Annex I.

Key Gaps in Science of Climate Change

Despite the United States' intensive investment in climate change science over the past decade, numerous gaps remain in our understanding of climate change. The National Academy of Sciences identified in its report, Climate Change Science: An Analysis of Some Key Questions (June 2001), critical uncertainties about the science of climate change. At the most fundamental level, the report indicated the need to better understand the causes of warming. The National Academy of Sciences stated, "Greenhouse gases are accumulating in Earth's atmosphere as a result of human activities, causing surface air temperatures and subsurface ocean temperatures to rise. Temperatures are, in fact, rising. The changes observed over the last several decades are likely mostly due to human activities, but we cannot rule out that some significant part of these changes are also a reflection of natural variability."

The National Academy of Sciences report goes on to identify a range of specific areas of scientific uncertainty that require additional study and research. These gaps include:

- How much carbon is sequestered by oceans and terrestrial sinks and how much remains in the atmosphere is uncertain:
  - ✓ "How land contributes, by location and processes, to exchanges of carbon with the atmosphere is still highly uncertain. . . ." (p. 11)
  - ✓ "These estimates [of future carbon dioxide climate forcings] . . . are only approximate because of uncertainty about how efficiently the ocean and terrestrial biosphere will sequester atmospheric CO_2." (p. 13)
  - ✓ "How much of the carbon from future use of fossil fuels will be seen as increases in carbon dioxide in the atmosphere will depend on what fractions are taken up by land and by the oceans. The exchanges with land occur on various time scales, out to centuries for soil decomposition in high latitudes, and they are sensitive to climate change. Their projection into the future is highly problematic." (p. 18)

- The feedbacks in the climate system that determine the magnitude and rate of temperature increases are uncertain:

- ✓ "Because there is considerable uncertainty in current understanding of how the climate system varies naturally and reacts to emissions of greenhouse gases and aerosols, current estimates of the magnitude of future warming should be regarded as tentative and subject to future adjustments (either upward or downward)." (p. 1)

- ✓ "Much of the difference in predictions of global warming by various climate models is attributable to the fact that each model represents these [feedback] processes in its own particular way. These uncertainties will remain until a more fundamental understanding of the processes that control atmospheric relative humidity and clouds is achieved." (p. 4)

- ➢ The direct and indirect effects of aerosols are uncertain:

  - ✓ "The greatest uncertainty about the aerosol climate forcing—indeed, the largest of all the uncertainties about global climate forcings—is probably the indirect effect of aerosols on clouds." (p. 14)
  - ✓ "The great uncertainty about this indirect aerosol climate forcing presents a severe handicap both for the interpretation of past climate change and for future assessments of climate changes." (p. 14)
  - ✓ "Climate forcing by anthropogenic aerosols is a large source of uncertainty about future climate change." (p. 13)
  - ✓ "Because of the scientific uncertainties associated with the sources and composition of carbonaceous aerosols, projections of future impacts on climate are difficult." (p. 12)

- ➢ The details and impacts of regional climate change resulting from global climate change are uncertain:

  - ✓ "On the regional scale and in the longer term, there is much more uncertainty" with respect to effects on agriculture and forestry. (p. 19)
  - ✓ "The Northern Hemisphere as a whole experienced a slight cooling from 1946-75, and the cooling during that period was quite marked over the eastern United States. The cause of this hiatus in the warming is still under debate." (p. 16)
  - ✓ "Health outcomes in response to climate change are the subject of intense debate. . . .The understanding of the relationships between weather/climate and human health is in its infancy and therefore the health consequences of climate change are poorly understood. The costs, benefits, and availability of resources for adaptation are also uncertain." (p. 20)
  - ✓ "Changes in storm frequency and intensity are one of the more uncertain elements of future climate change prediction." (p. 20)

- ➢ The nature and causes of the natural variability of climate and its interactions with forced changes are uncertain:

  - ✓ "Because of the large and still uncertain level of natural variability inherent in the climate record and the uncertainties in the time histories of the various forcing agents (and particularly aerosols), a causal linkage between the buildup of greenhouse gases in the atmosphere and the observed climate changes during the 20th century cannot be unequivocally established." (p. 17)

- ✓ The value of indirect effect of ozone changes induced by solar ultraviolet irradiance variations "remains highly uncertain." (p. 14)

- ➢ The future usage of fossil fuels and the future emissions of methane are uncertain:

  - ✓ "With a better understanding of the sources and sinks of methane, it may be possible to encourage practices . . . that lead to a decrease in atmospheric methane and significantly reduce future climate change." (p. 13)
  - ✓ "There is no definitive scientific basis for choosing among several possible explanations for these variations in the rates of change of global methane contributions, making it very difficult to predict its future atmospheric concentrations." (p. 11)

In response to these gaps in our knowledge, the National Academy of Sciences study also recommends, "research that couples physical, chemical biological and human systems; an improved capability of integrating scientific knowledge, including its uncertainty, into effective decision support systems, and an ability to conduct research at the regional or sectoral level that promotes analysis of the response of human and natural systems to multiple stresses."

The NAS report also indicates that to advance the understanding of climate change, it will be necessary to have "a global observing system in support of long term climate monitoring and prediction [and] concentration on large-scale modeling through increased, dedicated supercomputing and human resources." In addition to the recent National Academy of Sciences report, the USGCRP has updated its ten-year plan and submitted it to the National Research Council (NRC) for review. High priority areas for further research are identified in numerous recent reports and documents, such as: "Global Environmental Change: Research Pathways for the Next Decade" (NRC 1998), "Capacity of US Climate Modeling to Support Climate Change Assessment Activities" (NRC, 1998), "Adequacy of Climate Observing Systems" (NRC, 1999), and others.

Advancing the Science

The National Academy of Sciences report states that an "effective strategy for advancing the understanding of climate change will also require…efforts to ensure that climate research is supported and managed to assure innovation, effectiveness and efficiency." Over the decade of the USGCRP, interagency management of the program has weakened. The National Research Council in its report, "Global Environmental Change: Research Pathways for the Next Decade" (NRC 1998), identified the problem, and the USGCRP draft ten-year plan has proposed changes to the management structure. Such issues merit careful and high-level review, in consultation with the Congress.

Therefore, to advance the science of climate change and focus efforts on the many key areas of uncertainty, President Bush will:

- Direct the Secretary of Commerce, working with other agencies, to set priorities for additional investments in climate change research, to review such investments, and to maximize coordination among federal agencies.
- Fully fund all priority research areas that the review finds are underfunded or need to be accelerated relative to other research. Such areas could include the carbon cycle, climate modeling, and global water cycle.

The United States is making significant investments in the science of climate change and is pledging to accelerate its own research. Climate change is a global problem, however, and other nations must continue to advance the state of scientific knowledge.

The National Research Council, the US Global Change Research Program, and the World Meteorological Organization have all identified the building of a global observing system to monitor climate as being crucial to improving our understanding of the science of climate change. This system must include developing countries that have limited resources to make the necessary measurements.

The United States, Europe, and Japan each have significant climate modeling capabilities. The United States leads the world in the basic science of climate modeling, and Europe and Japan have built dedicated centers for climate modeling with a clearly defined mission.

Therefore, to enhance research, build a global climate observation system, and improve climate modeling, President Bush will:

- Challenge the major greenhouse gas emitting countries to increase significantly their investments in high priority areas of climate change research.
- Provide up to $25 million to help build climate observation systems in developing countries throughout the world, and call upon other developed countries to provide matching funds for such an investment.
- Propose a joint venture with the European Union, Japan and others to develop state-of-the-art climate modeling to help us better predict the causes and consequences of climate change.

Annex I

Agency Roles in the USGCRP

US Department of Agriculture: USDA-sponsored research focuses on understanding terrestrial systems and the effects of global change (including water balance, atmospheric deposition, vegetative quality, and UV-B radiation) on food, fiber, and forestry production in agricultural, forest, and range ecosystems. USDA estimates changes in carbon stocks on forests and agricultural lands and greenhouse gas emissions from agricultural sources, and performs research on how agricultural and forestry activities such as afforestation, changes in tillage practices, and bioenergy can contribute to a reduction in greenhouse gases.

Department of Commerce/National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA): NOAA's ground, ocean, and satellite observations, with an emphasis on oceanic and atmospheric dynamics, circulation, and chemistry, are an important part of the U.S. research program. They have resulted in improvements in climate modeling, prediction, and information management capabilities. NOAA also sponsors a wide range of studies on ocean-land-atmosphere interactions, the global hydrological cycle, and the role of global transfers of carbon dioxide among the atmosphere, ocean and terrestrial biosphere in climate change; the projection and assessment of variability across multiple timescales and the study of the relationship between the natural climate system and society and the development of methodologies for applying climate information to problems of social and economic consequences.

Department of Defense: The Department of Defense continues a history of participation in the USGCRP through sponsored research that concurrently satisfies national security requirements and stated goals of the USGCRP.

Department of Energy: Research supported by DOE's Office of Biological and Environmental Research (BER) addresses the effects of energy production and use on the global Earth system, primarily through studies of climate response. It includes research in climate modeling, atmospheric chemistry and transport, atmospheric properties and processes affecting the Earth's radiation balance and sources and sinks of energy-related greenhouse gases (primarily CO_2). It also includes research on the consequences of atmospheric and climatic changes on ecological systems and resources, critical data needs for the detection and attribution of climate change, tools and methods needed to conduct scientific assessments of climate change, and education and training of scientists and researchers in global change.

National Institutes of Health: Four NIH institutes support research on the health effects of UV and near-UV radiation. Their main objectives include increased understanding of the effects of UV and near-UV radiation exposure on target organs (e.g., eyes, skin, immune system) and of the molecular changes that lead to these effects, and the development of strategies to prevent the initiation or promotion of disease before it is clinically defined. National Institutes of Environmental Health Sciences (NIEHS) supports research on the health effects of chlorofluorocarbon replacement chemicals, including studies on the metabolism and toxicity of hydrochlorofluorocarbons and halogenated hydrocarbons.

Department of the Interior/U.S. Geological Survey (USGS): Research at USGS examines terrestrial and marine processes and the natural history of global change, including the interactions between climate and the hydrologic system. Studies seek to understand the character of past and present environments and the geological, biological, hydrological, and geochemical processes involved in environmental change.

Environmental Protection Agency: EPA's Global Change Research Program is an assessment-oriented program with primary emphasis on understanding the potential consequences of climate variability and change on human health, ecosystems, and socio-economic systems in the United States. This entails: (1) improving the scientific basis for evaluating effects of global change in the context of other stresses and human dimensions (as humans are catalysts of and respond to global change); (2) conducting assessments of the risks and opportunities presented by global change; and (3) assessing adaptation options to improve society's ability to effectively respond to the risks and opportunities presented by global change as they emerge.

National Aeronautics and Space Administration: NASA research efforts in global change involve space-based studies of the Earth as an integrated system, including research and satellite programs studying atmospheric chemistry and ozone; ocean surface winds, tropical precipitation and the global hydrological cycle and climate variability cycle; and the global carbon cycle, ocean biological productivity and land surface vegetation and ecosystems. The space-based activity complements ongoing ground-based research programs in the observation, understanding, and modeling of radiation, climate dynamics, and hydrology and water resources; ecosystem dynamics and biogeochemical cycles; atmospheric chemistry; and the processing, archiving, retrieval, dissemination, and use of global change data. The focus is Earth system science, which involves interdisciplinary research and coupled modeling. Development of algorithms for retrieval of the information content of space-based observations is carried out as part of the flight mission.

National Science Foundation: NSF global change research programs support research and related activities to advance the fundamental understanding of dynamic physical, biological, and socio-economic systems and the interactions among them. The programs encourage interdisciplinary activities with particular focus on Earth system processes and the consequences of change. NSF programs facilitate data acquisition and information management activities necessary for fundamental research on global change, promote the enhancement of models designed to improve our understanding of Earth system processes and interactions, and develop advanced analytic methods to facilitate basic research. NSF also supports fundamental research on the general processes used by organizations to identify and evaluate policies for mitigation, adaptation, and other responses to the challenge of varying environmental conditions.

Smithsonian Institution: The Smithsonian Institution program strives to improve knowledge of the natural processes involved in global climate change, to provide a long-term repository of climate-relevant research materials for present and future studies, and to bring this knowledge to various audiences, ranging from scholarly to lay public. The unique contribution of the Smithsonian Institution is a long-term perspective – e.g., undertaking investigations that may require extended study before producing useful results and conducting observations on sufficiently long (e.g. decadal) time-scales to resolve human-caused modification of natural variability.

Developing an Effective and Science Based Approach to Addressing Global Climate Change

Summary

- The Bush Administration is working with our allies to develop an effective and science-based approach to addressing global climate change. Global climate change is an issue that affects the entire world -- and it is an issue that must be addressed by the entire world.

- The surface temperature of the earth is warming and concentrations of greenhouse gases, especially CO2, have increased substantially since the beginning of the Industrial revolution – and the National Academy of Sciences indicates this increase is due in large part to human activity.

- The National Academy of Sciences report concludes that significant areas of uncertainty remain, including how much effect natural fluctuations in climate may have had on warming, how fast climate changes will occur, the magnitude of those changes, and their impacts.

- The Kyoto Protocol is fundamentally flawed:

  - Its targets have no scientific basis.
  - Kyoto's targets are unrealistic -- many countries will not achieve them.
  - Kyoto's targets are draconian -- requiring a 30% reduction in U.S. greenhouse gas emissions. Compliance with these targets could cause a 1% to 2% reduction in the United States GDP by 2010 – a reduction comparable to the oil shock of the 1970's – and would increase prices for consumers and cause layoffs of workers.
  - Kyoto is ineffective: it excludes developing countries, whose net emissions of greenhouse gases already exceed those of industrialized countries.

- While the U.S. rejects Kyoto, the President has committed the U.S. to a leadership role in addressing the issue of climate change.

- The U.S. already takes many proactive steps to address global climate change:

  - The U.S. spends $1.6 billion annually on climate science -- more than Japan and the 15 EU countries combined.
  - The U.S.' many initiatives have produced results -- the carbon-intensity of the economy has been lowered by 15% since 1990.
  - The President's Comprehensive National Energy Plan could further cut greenhouse gas emissions through conservation, improved energy efficiency, and increased reliance on natural gas, renewables, hydro and nuclear power.

- The President wants to increase the U.S.' efforts to address global climate change by:

  - Establishing the "U.S. Climate Change Research Initiative" to advance the science of climate change, focusing on key areas of uncertainty.

- ✓ Fully funds all priority research areas
- ✓ Challenges major greenhouse gas emitting countries to increase significantly their investments.
- ✓ Provides matching funds to help build climate observation systems in developing countries
- ✓ Proposes a joint venture with the EU, Japan and others to develop state-of-the-art climate modeling

- Launching the "National Climate Change Technology Initiative", tasking the Secretaries of Commerce and Energy to strengthen basic research and develop public-private partnerships to bring cutting edge technologies to market; and

- Increasing cooperative efforts within our hemisphere and globally, especially with developing countries, tasking the Secretary of State and others to build partnerships to measure and mitigate emissions, undertake research, and invest in forestation.

➢ The President directed the Cabinet-level climate change working group to consider approaches to reduce greenhouse gas emissions, drawing on the power of markets and the promise of technology. That effort will be guided by several basic principles:

- The approach must be consistent with the long-term goal of stabilizing concentrations of greenhouse gases in the atmosphere.
- Our actions should be measured, as we learn more and build on it.
- Our approach must be flexible to adjust to new information and take advantage of new technology.
- We must ensure continued economic growth in the U.S. and the world.
- We should pursue market-based incentives and spur technological innovation.
- And our approach must be based on global participation, including developing countries.

➢ The President directed Secretary Powell and EPA Administrator Whitman to work actively with friends and allies to explore common approaches to climate change consistent with these principles.

Scientists' Report Doesn't
Support the Kyoto Treaty
By Richard S. Lindzen. Mr. Lindzen, a professor of meteorology at MIT, was a member of the National Academy of Sciences panel on climate change.
Last week the National Academy of Sciences released a report on climate change, prepared in response to a request from the White House, that was depicted in the press as an implicit endorsement of the Kyoto Protocol. CNN's Michelle Mitchell was typical of the coverage when she declared that the report represented "a unanimous decision that global warming is real, is getting worse, and is due to man. There is no wiggle room."
As one of 11 scientists who prepared the report, I can state that this is simply untrue. For starters, the NAS never asks that all participants agree to all elements of a report, but rather that the report represent the span of views. This the full report did, making clear that there is no consensus, unanimous or otherwise, about long-term climate trends and what causes them.
As usual, far too much public attention was paid to the hastily prepared summary rather than to the body of the report. The summary began with a zinger -- that greenhouse gases are accumulating in Earth's atmosphere as a result of human activities, causing surface air temperatures and subsurface ocean temperatures to rise, etc., before following with the necessary qualifications. For example, the full text noted that 20 years was too short a period for estimating long-term trends, but the summary forgot to mention this.

Our primary conclusion was that despite some knowledge and agreement, the science is by no means settled. We are quite confident (1) that global mean temperature is about 0.5 degrees Celsius higher than it was a century ago; (2) that atmospheric levels of carbon dioxide have risen over the past two centuries; and (3) that carbon dioxide is a greenhouse gas whose increase is likely to warm the earth (one of many, the most important being water vapor and clouds).

But -- and I cannot stress this enough -- we are not in a position to confidently attribute past climate change to carbon dioxide or to forecast what the climate will be in the future. That is to say, contrary to media impressions, agreement with the three basic statements tells us almost nothing relevant to policy discussions.

One reason for this uncertainty is that, as the report states, the climate is always changing; change is the norm. Two centuries ago, much of the Northern Hemisphere was emerging from a little ice age. A millennium ago, during the Middle Ages, the same region was in a warm period. Thirty years ago, we were concerned with global cooling.

Distinguishing the small recent changes in global mean temperature from the natural variability, which is unknown, is not a trivial task. All attempts so far make the assumption that existing computer climate models simulate natural variability, but I doubt that anyone really believes this assumption.

We simply do not know what relation, if any, exists between global climate changes and water vapor, clouds, storms, hurricanes, and other factors, including regional climate changes, which are generally much larger than global changes and not correlated with them. Nor do we know how to predict changes in greenhouse gases. This is because we cannot forecast economic and technological change over the next century, and also because there are many man-made substances whose properties and levels are not well known, but which could be comparable in importance to carbon dioxide.

What we do is know that a doubling of carbon dioxide by itself would produce only a modest temperature increase of one degree Celsius. Larger projected increases depend on "amplification" of the carbon dioxide by more important, but poorly modeled, greenhouse gases, clouds and water vapor.

The press has frequently tied the existence of climate change to a need for Kyoto. The NAS panel did not address this question. My own view, consistent with the panel's work, is that the Kyoto Protocol would not result in a substantial reduction in global warming. Given the difficulties in significantly limiting levels of atmospheric carbon dioxide, a more effective policy might well focus on other greenhouse substances whose potential for reducing global warming in a short time may be greater.

The panel was finally asked to evaluate the work of the United Nations' Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, focusing on the Summary for Policymakers, the only part ever read or quoted. The Summary for Policymakers, which is seen as endorsing Kyoto, is commonly presented as the consensus of thousands of the world's foremost climate scientists. Within the confines of professional courtesy, the NAS panel essentially concluded that the IPCC's Summary for Policymakers does not provide suitable guidance for the U.S. government.

The full IPCC report is an admirable description of research activities in climate science, but it is not specifically directed at policy. The Summary for Policymakers is, but it is also a very different document. It represents a consensus of government representatives (many of whom are also their nations' Kyoto representatives), rather than of scientists. The resulting document has a strong tendency to disguise uncertainty, and conjures up some scary scenarios for which there is no evidence.

Science, in the public arena, is commonly used as a source of authority with which to bludgeon political opponents and propagandize uninformed citizens. This is what has been done with both the reports of the IPCC and the NAS. It is a reprehensible practice that corrodes our ability to make rational decisions. A fairer view of the science will show that there is still a vast amount of uncertainty -- far more than advocates of Kyoto would like to acknowledge -- and that the NAS report has hardly ended the debate. Nor was it meant to.

Introduction

Three months ago, the President directed a Cabinet-level review of U.S. climate change policy. Members of the Cabinet, the Vice President, and senior White House staff have been meeting to examine the science, technologies, current U.S. efforts, and a wide range of innovative options for addressing concentrations of greenhouse gases in the atmosphere.

During that time, the Cabinet-level climate change working group has held regular and intensive sessions and has heard from many experts representing a wide range of views. To obtain the most recent information and a balanced view of what we know and do not know about the science of climate change, the working group requested a report from the National Academy of Sciences. The report outlines areas supported by the science and significant gaps in our knowledge of climate change.

The following material contains the initial findings of the working group: summaries of current U.S. actions, an analysis of the Kyoto Protocol, and proposals to advance the science, advance technologies, and create partnerships in the Western Hemisphere and throughout the world to address climate change.

The President has directed the Cabinet-level climate change working group to press forward and develop innovative approaches in accordance with several basic principles. These approaches should: (1) be consistent with the long-term goal of stabilizing greenhouse gas concentrations in the atmosphere; (2) be measured, as we learn more from science and build on it; (3) be flexible to adjust to new information and take advantage of new technology; (4) ensure continued economic growth and prosperity; (5) pursue market-based incentives and spur technological innovation; and (6) be based on global participation, including developing countries.

The Cabinet-level climate change working group will continue its review consistent with these principles.

CURRENT U.S. ACTIONS TO ADDRESS CLIMATE CHANGE

"The earth's well-being is also an issue important to America – and it's an issue that should be important to every nation and in every part of the world. My Administration is committed to a leadership role on the issue of climate change. We recognize our responsibility and we will meet it, at home, in our hemisphere, and in the world."

--President George W. Bush

Executive Summary

The United States government is currently pursuing a broad range of strategies to reduce emissions of greenhouse gases in the major greenhouse gas emitting sectors of our economy:

- Electricity -- Federal programs promote greenhouse gas reductions through the development of cleaner, more efficient technologies for electricity generation and transmission. The government is also supporting the development of renewable resources, such as solar energy, wind power, geothermal energy, hydropower, bio-energy, and hydrogen.
- Transportation -- The United States is currently promoting the development of fuel-efficient motor vehicles and trucks, researching options for producing cleaner fuels, and implementing programs to reduce the number of vehicle miles traveled.
- Industry -- The United States is implementing many partnership programs with industry to reduce emissions of carbon dioxide (CO_2) and other greenhouse gases, to promote source reduction and recycling, and to increase the use of combined heat and power.
- Buildings -- Federal voluntary partnership programs promote energy efficiency in the nation's commercial, residential, and government buildings (including schools) by offering technical assistance as well as the labeling of efficient products, efficient new homes, and efficient office buildings.
- Agriculture and Forestry -- The Federal government is implementing conservation programs that have the benefit of sequestering carbon in soils and off-setting agricultural emissions of greenhouse gases.
- The Federal Government – The Federal Government has taken steps to reduce greenhouse gas emissions from energy use in Federal buildings and in the Federal transportation fleet.
- The National Energy Policy – The National Energy Policy includes new recommendations to promote energy efficiency, conservation, increased use of natural gas and renewable energy, and the new construction of nuclear capacity.

United States government climate change programs are achieving real results, helping to reduce greenhouse gas emissions by 66 million metric tons of carbon equivalent in 2000. United States carbon intensity – the amount of CO2 emitted per unit of GDP – declined 15% from 1990 to 1999.

In addition, businesses, state and local governments, and non-governmental organizations are addressing global climate change – by improving the measurement and reporting of greenhouse gas emission reductions; through voluntary reductions, including emissions trading; and actions to sequester carbon through tree planting and forest preservation, restoration and management.

The Federal Government

The U.S. government is currently pursuing a broad range of strategies to reduce emissions of greenhouse gases, including:

- Voluntary public-private partnership programs that promote energy efficiency and the broader use of renewable energy;
- Research and development (R&D) investments and tax incentives to increase energy efficiency and the broader use of renewable energy;
- Appliance standards that increase the minimum level of efficiency of products on the market;
- Financial incentives such as grants to states and localities; and
- Programs to reduce greenhouse gas emissions from Federal buildings and transportation fleets.

These programs are achieving real reductions in greenhouse gas emissions – the U.S. government estimates that its existing climate change programs reduced emissions by 66 million metric tons of carbon equivalent (MMTCE) in 2000[1], approximately 2.7% of total emissions. The amount of CO2 emitted per unit of GDP declined 15% from 1990 to 1999.[2]

The following sections highlight illustrative programs in the major greenhouse gas emitting sectors of the economy: the electric power industry (32% of total U.S. greenhouse gas emissions); transportation (27%); other industry (21%); residential and commercial buildings (13%); and agriculture and forestry (net 7%) (unlike other sectors of the economy, agricultural and forestry activities can actively remove carbon dioxide from the atmosphere).[3]

Electricity

Federal programs promote greenhouse gas reductions through the development of cleaner, more efficient technologies for electricity generation and transmission. For example, the Environmental Protection Agency/Department of Energy Combined Heat and Power Challenge program has the goal of doubling U.S. combined heat and power capacity by 2010 by providing technical assistance and addressing regulatory issues where possible.

The Federal government is also supporting renewable resources such as solar energy, wind power, geothermal energy, hydropower, bio-energy, and hydrogen. For example, the Department of Energy supports the development of a wide range of solar and renewable energy technology, seeking to improve their reliability, expand their applicability, and reduce their costs. These activities have been very successful in bringing down technology costs. The cost of producing photo-voltaic modules has decreased 50 percent since 1991, and the cost of wind power has decreased 85 percent since 1980. Commercial success has been achieved for both of these areas in certain applications.

Transportation

The U.S. is currently promoting the development of fuel-efficient motor vehicles and trucks, researching options for producing cleaner fuels, and implementing programs to reduce the number of vehicle miles traveled. For example, through the Partnership for a New Generation of Vehicles (PNGV) program, the research has directly led to the commercial introduction of new hybrid vehicles and soon hydrogen as well. Commercialization of such vehicles could cut fuel use and carbon emissions for individual vehicles significantly and could lay the foundation for large, long-term fuel and carbon benefits. If 10% of the on-road vehicle fleet utilized PNGV technologies, the aggregate emission reductions could be approximately 20 million metric tons of carbon equivalent per year. The program is being extended to sport utility vehicles and other light trucks which, because of their lower baseline fuel economies, have the potential for even greater overall fuel and carbon savings per vehicle.

Industry

The U.S. government is implementing many partnership programs with industry to reduce emissions of carbon dioxide (CO_2) and other greenhouse gases, to promote source reduction and recycling, and to increase the use of combined heat and power. For example, current voluntary partnerships directed toward eliminating market barriers to the profitable collection and use of methane that otherwise would be released to the atmosphere are expected to hold methane emissions at or below 1990 levels through 2010. Since the launch of EPA's Voluntary Aluminum Industrial Partnership in 1995, the program's membership has grown to include 22 of the nation's 23 aluminum smelters, representing 94% of U.S. production capacity. As of 2000, program partners cumulatively achieved a 45% reduction in perfluorocarbon (a high global warming potential gas) emissions from 1990 levels.[4]

Commercial and Residential Buildings

Partnership programs promote energy efficiency in the nation's commercial, residential, and government buildings (including schools) by offering technical assistance as well as the labeling of efficient products, efficient new homes, and efficient office buildings. As one example, the

[4] The Power of Partnerships: Energy Star and Other Voluntary Programs, 2000 Annual Report of the Climate Protection Partnerships Division, U.S. EPA, Summer 2001.

EPA/DOE Energy Star program collaborates with a wide range of building owners and users -- retailers, real estate investors, small businesses, governments and schools. Each partner commits to improve the energy performance of its facilities and the most efficient buildings are awarded the Energy Star label. More than 16% of the U.S. commercial, public, and industrial building market is enrolled in Energy Star. Nationwide, Energy Star has eliminated the need for over 10,000 megawatts of peak generating capacity – equivalent to 20 large (50 MW) power plants.[5]

Agriculture and Forestry

The Federal government is conducting research into methods to reduce emissions of methane and nitrous oxide from agriculture, and is implementing conservation programs that have the benefit of sequestering carbon in soils and forests. For example, USDA's Conservation Reserve Program (CRP) has taken over 36 million acres of environmentally sensitive crop land out of production. CRP provides long-term environmental benefits, including the offset of up to 12 MMTCE each year.[6]

The Federal Government

The Federal Government has taken steps to reduce greenhouse gas emissions from energy use in Federal buildings and in the Federal transportation fleet by:

- Requiring all Federal agencies to take steps to cut greenhouse gas emissions from energy use in buildings by 30% below 1990 levels by 2010.
- Directing Federal agencies in Washington, D.C. to offer to their employees up to $65 per month in transit and van pool benefits.
- Requiring Federal agencies to implement strategies to reduce their fleet's annual petroleum consumption by 20% relative to 1999 consumption levels and to use alternative fuels a majority of the time.

Businesses, States and Communities, and Non-Governmental Organizations

Businesses, states and local governments, and non-governmental organizations are also moving forward to address global climate change -- through programs to improve the measurement and reporting of emission reductions; through voluntary programs, including emissions trading programs; and through sequestration programs. For example:

- Under the Voluntary Reporting of Greenhouse Gases program, provided by Section 1605(b) of the Energy Policy Act of 1992, more than 200 companies voluntarily reported to the Department of Energy their voluntary measures to reduce, avoid or sequester greenhouse gas emissions, principally carbon dioxide.[7] These companies undertook 1,715 projects and achieved greenhouse gas emission reductions and carbon sequestration equivalent to 61.5 MMTCE, or about 3.4 percent of 1999 total U.S. greenhouse gas emissions.[8]

- Electric Utilities: Several companies have committed to reducing greenhouse gas emissions. Measures include:

  - ✓ Improved generation efficiency (seasonal use of natural gas, hydroelectric turbine replacements, expanded capacity, shortened outage schedules at nuclear plants);
  - ✓ Improved pipeline, transmission and distribution equipment efficiencies (including reducing leaks);
  - ✓ Increased use of renewables (wind, biomass and solar);
  - ✓ Improved home and office energy efficiencies (low-income weatherization, home energy audits, inefficient refrigerator and freezer removal and recycling, installation of advanced energy management systems, planting trees, and retrofitting energy efficient lighting in company buildings); and
  - ✓ Investments in more efficient technologies (programs to install geothermal heat pumps, commercialize emerging energy efficient and renewable energy technologies, accelerate introduction of electric vehicles into the marketplace, and enhance carbon sequestration).

- Oil and Gas: Some oil and gas companies have added greenhouse gas reductions to their list of corporate priorities. One company intends to reduce its greenhouse gases by 10% by 2002 (over 1990 levels), and another company is seeking to reduce by 10% by 2010. To do this, the company is adopting an internal system of company-wide emissions trading to meet its goal in the most cost-effective way possible. Significant gains can be made from such measures as reducing flaring and leaking.

- Auto Manufacturers: Auto manufacturers have announced production plans for hybrid gas and electric vehicles in 2003 or 2004 and have pledged to increase their sport utility vehicles' fuel economy by 25% by 2005.

- Chemicals: A chemicals trade association supports voluntary programs and its members' actions to improve energy efficiency and reduce greenhouse gases. For example, one company says it will reduce its greenhouse gas emissions by 65% (by 2010, over 1990 levels). It already has cut its global emissions by 45% by making major process-change investments (reducing nitrous oxides), by holding energy consumption flat even with tremendous production growth (with powerhouse and process efficiencies), and increased use of renewable energy. Another company is working to reduce energy use by 20% per unit of production by 2005.

- Non-Governmental Organizations. Several non-governmental organizations and coalitions have initiated partnership programs with large global corporations to reduce emissions of greenhouse gases, and promote the use of energy conservation, renewable energy sources, and efficient technologies. Non-governmental organizations also are working with companies to support forestry projects that sequester carbon through tree planting and forest preservation, restoration and management.

[8] DOE/EIA-0608 (1999), Annual Report of the Voluntary Reporting of Greenhouse Gases, February 12, 2001.

- States. More than 25 states have initiated state-based action plans to reduce greenhouse gas emissions. Some states are using market-based mechanisms to achieve reductions. For example, the State of New Jersey has established a 3.5% statewide reduction goal and is developing voluntary agreements with various businesses.

The National Energy Policy

The National Energy Policy includes numerous recommendations to promote energy efficiency and conservation and to reduce emissions of greenhouse gases through the use of alternative, renewable, and cleaner forms of energy.[9] These recommendations include:

Efficiency and Conservation Measures

- Tax incentives and other initiatives to promote the use of combined heat and power.

  The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of the Treasury to work with Congress to encourage increased energy efficiency through combined heat and power (CHP) projects by shortening the depreciation life for CHP projects or providing an investment tax credit.

  The NEPD Group also recommended that the President direct the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) to work with local and state governments to promote the use of well-designed CHP and other clean power generation at brownfields sites, consistent with the local communities' interests. EPA will also work to clarify liability issues if they are raised at a particular site.

  The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the EPA Administrator to promote CHP through flexibility in environmental permitting.

- Reviewing and providing recommendations on establishing CAFE standards as well as other market-based approaches to increase the national average fuel economy of new motor vehicles.

  The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of Transportation to:

  - ✓ Review and provide recommendations on establishing Corporate Average Fuel Economy (CAFE) standards with due consideration of the National Academy of Sciences study to be released in July 2001. Responsibly crafted CAFE standards should increase efficiency without negatively impacting the U.S. automotive industry. The determination of future fuel economy standards must therefore be addressed analytically and based on sound science.

[9] National Energy Policy: Report of the National Energy Policy Development Group, May 2001.

- ✓ Consider passenger safety, economic concerns, and disparate impact on the U.S. versus foreign fleets of automobiles.
- ✓ Look at other market-based approaches to increasing the national average fuel economy of new motor vehicles.

➢ Directing all agencies to use technological advances to better protect our environment.

The Administration remains committed to investing in Intelligent Transportation Systems (ITS) and encourages the private sector to invest in ITS applications. This Department of Transportation (DOT) program funds the development of improved transportation infrastructure that will reduce congestion, such as traveler information/navigation systems, freeway management, and electronic toll collection. ITS applications reduce fuel associated with travel.

The Administration remains committed to the DOT's fuel-cell-powered transit bus program, authored by the Transportation Equity Act for the 21st Century (TEA-21). This program demonstrates the viability of fuel-cell power plants for transit bus applications.

The Administration remains committed to the Clean Buses program. TEA-21 establishes a new clean fuel formula grant program, which provides an opportunity to accelerate the introduction of advanced bus propulsion technologies into the mainstream of the nation's transit fleet.

➢ Promoting energy efficiency, including expanding the Energy Star program.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of Energy to conduct a review of current funding and historic performance of energy efficiency research and development programs in light of the recommendations of this report. In addition, the NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Office of Science and Technology Policy and the President's Council of Advisors on Science and Technology to review and make recommendations on using the nation's energy resources more efficiently.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of Energy to promote greater energy efficiency:

- ✓ Expand the Energy Star program beyond office buildings to include schools, retail buildings, health care facilities, and homes.
- ✓ Extend the Energy Star labeling program to additional products, appliances, and services.
- ✓ Strengthen Department of Energy public education programs relating to energy efficiency.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the EPA Administrator to develop and implement a strategy to increase public awareness of the sizable savings that energy efficiency offers to homeowners across the country.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of Energy to establish a national priority for improving energy efficiency. The priority would be to improve the energy intensity of the U.S. economy as measured by the amount of energy required for each dollar of economic productivity. This increased efficiency should be pursued through the combined efforts of industry, consumers, and federal, state, and local governments.

- Conserving energy at federal facilities.

  The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct heads of executive departments and agencies to take appropriate actions to conserve energy use at their facilities to the maximum extent consistent with the effective discharge of public responsibilities.

- Improving and expanding appliance standards.

  The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of Energy to improve the energy efficiency of appliances:

  - ✓ Support the appliance standards program for covered products, setting higher standards where technologically feasible and economically justified.
  - ✓ Expand the scope of the appliance standards program, setting standards for additional appliances where technologically feasible and economically justified.

- Promoting congestion mitigation technologies.

  The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of Transportation to review and promote congestion mitigation technologies and strategies and work with Congress on legislation to implement these strategies.

- Reducing demand for transportation fuels by establishing a ground freight management program.

  The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the EPA and DOT to develop ways to reduce demand for petroleum transportation fuels. These agencies will work with the trucking industry to establish a program to reduce emissions and fuel consumption from long-haul trucks at truck stops by implementing alternatives to idling, such as electrification and auxiliary power units at truck stops along interstate highways. EPA and DOT will develop partnership agreements with trucking fleets, truck stops, and manufacturers of idle-reducing technologies (e.g., portable auxiliary packs, electrification) to install and use low-emission-idling technologies.

Alternative, Renewable, and Clean Forms of Energy

- Increasing America's use of renewable and alternative energy

  The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretaries of the Interior and Energy to re-evaluate access limitations to federal lands in order to increase renewable energy production, such as biomass, wind, geothermal, and solar.

The NEPD Group supported the increase of $39.2 million in the FY 2002 budget amendment for the Department of Energy's Energy Supply account that would provide increased support for research and development of renewable energy resources.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of Energy to conduct a review of current funding and historic performance of renewable energy and alternative energy research and development programs. Based on this review, the Secretary of Energy is then directed to propose appropriate funding of those research and development programs that are performance-based and are modeled as public-private partnerships.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of the Treasury to work with Congress to develop legislation to provide for a temporary income tax credit available for the purchase of new hybrid or fuel-cell vehicles between 2002 and 2007.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of the Treasury to work with Congress on legislation to expand the section 29 tax credit to make it available for new landfill methane projects. The credit could be tiered, depending on whether a landfill is already required by federal law to collect and flare its methane emissions due to local air pollution concerns.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of the Interior to determine ways to reduce the delays in geothermal lease processing as part of the permitting review process.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of the Treasury to work with Congress on legislation to extend and expand tax credits for electricity produced using wind and biomass. The President's budget request extends the present 1.7 cents per kilowatt hour tax credit for electricity produced from wind and biomass; expands eligible biomass sources to include forest-related sources, agricultural sources, and certain urban sources; and allows a credit for electricity produced from biomass co-fired with coal.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of the Treasury to work with Congress on legislation to provide a new 15 percent tax credit for residential solar energy property, up to a maximum credit of $2,000.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of the Treasury to work with Congress to continue the ethanol excise tax exemption.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the Secretary of Energy to develop next-generation technology—including hydrogen and fusion:

- ✓ Develop an education campaign that communicates the benefits of alternative forms of energy, including hydrogen and fusion.

- ✓ Focus research and development efforts on integrating current programs regarding hydrogen, fuel cells, and distributed energy.
- ✓ Support legislation reauthorizing the Hydrogen Energy Act.

➢ Promoting new construction of nuclear capacity that could significantly reduce future greenhouse gas emissions.

The NEPD Group recommended that the President support the expansion of nuclear energy in the United States as a major component of our national energy policy. Following are specific components of the recommendation:

- ✓ Encourage the Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC) to ensure that safety and environmental protection are high priorities as they prepare to evaluate and expedite applications for licensing new advanced-technology nuclear reactors.
- ✓ Encourage the NRC to facilitate efforts by utilities to expand nuclear energy generation in the United States by uprating existing nuclear plants safely.
- ✓ Encourage the NRC to relicense existing nuclear plants that meet or exceed safety standards.
- ✓ Direct the Secretary of Energy and the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency to assess the potential of nuclear energy to improve air quality.
- ✓ Increase resources as necessary for nuclear safety enforcement in light of the potential increase in generation.
- ✓ Use the best science to provide a deep geologic repository for nuclear waste.
- ✓ Support legislation clarifying that qualified funds set aside by plant owners for eventual decommissioning will not be taxed as part of the transaction.
- ✓ Support legislation to extend the Price–Anderson Act.

➢ Market-based three pollutant strategy

The NEPD Group recommended that the President direct the EPA Administrator to work with Congress to propose legislation that would establish a flexible, market-based program to significantly reduce and cap emissions of sulfur dioxide, nitrogen oxides, and mercury from electric power generators. Such a program (with appropriate measures to address local concerns) would provide significant public health benefits, including ancillary carbon benefits, even as we increase electricity supplies.

- ✓ Establish mandatory reduction targets for emissions of three main pollutants: sulfur dioxide, nitrogen oxides, and mercury.
- ✓ Phase in reductions over a reasonable period of time, similar to the successful acid rain reduction program established by the 1990 amendments to the Clean Air Act.
- ✓ Provide regulatory certainty to allow utilities to make modifications to their plants without fear of new litigation.

- ✓ Provide market-based incentives, such as emissions trading credits to help achieve the required reductions.

- Increasing research in clean coal technologies.

  The NEPD recommended that the President direct the Department of Energy to continue to develop advanced clean coal technology:

  - ✓ Investing $2 billion over 10 years to fund research in clean coal technologies.
  - ✓ Supporting a permanent extension of the existing research and development tax credit.
  - ✓ Directing federal agencies to explore regulatory approaches that will encourage advancements in environmental technology.

An Analysis of the Kyoto Protocol

"The Kyoto Protocol was fatally flawed in fundamental ways. But the process used to bring nations together to discuss our joint response to climate change is an important one."

– President George W. Bush

The Kyoto Protocol is fundamentally flawed. The Kyoto Protocol fails to establish a long-term goal based on science, poses serious and unnecessary risks to the U.S. and world economies, and is ineffective in addressing climate change because it excludes major parts of the world.

The Kyoto Protocol is ineffective in addressing climate change because it excludes developing countries. The Kyoto Protocol's emission reduction requirements apply only to industrialized countries. Developing countries can continue business as usual under the Kyoto Protocol, despite their rapidly growing emissions:

- Current data indicate that developing countries' net emissions (including emissions and uptake from land use activities) have already exceeded those of the developed world.[10]

- Moreover, annual developing country emissions of CO_2 will double between 1990 and 2010 – an increase that represents over twice as many tons as all of the reductions the United States would be required to take under the Kyoto Protocol.[11]

The Kyoto Protocol's targets are not based on science. Its targets and timetables were arrived at arbitrarily as a result of political negotiations, and are not related to any specific scientific information or long-term objective.

The Kyoto Protocol targets are precipitous. Under the Kyoto Protocol, the emission reduction target for the United States is 7% from 1990 levels for each year from 2008-2012. However, the figure of 7% is misleading, because it does not take into account growth in emissions between 1990 and 2012. The actual reduction from the U.S. current emissions trajectory for this period is over 30%.[12] In other words, meeting its target would require the United States to reduce its output of greenhouse emissions by one third in less than seven years. This would require U.S. firms to retire large amounts of capital stock prematurely, imposing substantial and unnecessary costs on the U.S. economy. The Kyoto Protocol also does not allow countries to count legitimate mitigation activities. In fact, it restricts the use of carbon sequestration as a means of achieving its objectives. Moreover, it does not address substances that impact climate change, such as black carbon and tropospheric ozone, reductions of which would also have significant health benefits.

[12] United States submission to the UNFCCC, 2001

The Kyoto Protocol risks significantly harming the U.S. and global economies. The Kyoto Protocol would require the United States to meet its target no matter what the cost, which could be substantial:

- Most models suggest a reduction in U.S. GDP of 1% to 2% by 2010 as a result of Kyoto without emissions trading.[13] A 2% reduction is comparable to the impact of the oil shock of the 1970s.

- A U.S. Department of Energy model suggests a reduction of as much as 4%[14] in GDP under a scenario in which the United States does not establish implementing regulations before 2005 and does not engage in emissions trading. Under such a scenario, the U.S. economy could be transformed from one of strong growth to recession, with potentially significant repercussions for the global economy.

Other major industrial countries also have very stringent targets. The difficulties many countries will have in meeting their targets raises serious questions about the viability of the Kyoto Protocol framework.

The Kyoto Protocol would leave the United States dangerously dependent on other countries to meet its emission targets. Under the Kyoto Protocol's emissions trading system, countries are allowed to buy and sell part of their emissions allowances. Most economic models indicate that achieving reductions through emissions trading with other countries may cost about half of what it would cost to achieve the same reductions domestically under the Kyoto Protocol.[15] Many analysts have pointed to trading as the only way that the United States could meet its Kyoto target. Yet few countries will have many excess tons to sell other than Russia and several other Eastern European countries that negotiated targets well above their expected emissions during the period 2008-2012. There is no guarantee that these allowances would be available:

- In order to sell allowances, countries must meet measuring and monitoring requirements. Some countries with excess emissions are far from meeting these requirements now, and it is likely that the United States and other countries would not know until at least 2007 whether they could meet their requirements. This creates enormous uncertainty about the cost of meeting the Kyoto Protocol until well after the United States has assumed its obligations.

- Even if these countries met their requirements and were allowed to sell their emission allowances, U.S. purchases of allowances would amount to many billions of dollars of financial transfers annually – without achieving any meaningful greenhouse gas emission reductions or climate benefit.

Advancing Technology to Address Climate Change

"America is a leader in technology and innovation. We all believe technology offers great promise to significantly reduce emissions. So we are creating the 'National Climate Change Technology Initiative.' "

– President George W. Bush

Executive Summary

New technologies hold the promise of increasing our supply of energy more efficiently and more cleanly. Technology has also played and will continue to play an important role in reducing greenhouse gas emissions and controlling costs. Because greenhouse gas emissions come from many sectors of the economy, a wide variety of technologies will be needed. A portfolio of technologies to address climate change could include energy efficient technologies; lower carbon-emitting technologies; carbon capture, storage and sequestration technologies; and new technological discoveries yet to be made.

To advance the technology across each of these areas, President Bush will create the National Climate Change Technology Initiative. The President is charging the Secretaries of Commerce and Energy, working with other agencies, to:

- Evaluate the current state of U.S. climate change technology research and development and make recommendations for improvements.
- Provide guidance on strengthening basic research at universities and national laboratories, including the development of the advanced mitigation technologies that offer the greatest promise for low-cost reductions of greenhouse gas emissions.
- Develop opportunities to enhance private-public partnerships in applied research and development to expedite innovative and cost-effective approaches to reduce greenhouse gas emissions.
- Make recommendations for funding demonstration projects for cutting-edge technologies.
- Develop improved technologies for measuring and monitoring gross and net greenhouse gas emissions.

The National Climate Change Technology Initiative also will enhance coordination across federal agencies, and among the federal government, universities, and the private sector.

The Importance of Technology to Mitigate Climate Change

Technology will continue to play an important role in reducing greenhouse gas emissions and controlling costs. The long-term objective of the 1992 Framework Convention on Climate Change – to stabilize greenhouse gas concentrations in the atmosphere – can be addressed in two ways. First, by reducing emissions of greenhouse gases. Because greenhouse gases are emitted so broadly across society, no single technology appears to be sufficient to stabilize the increasing atmospheric greenhouse gas concentrations. Rather, a portfolio of technologies aimed at improving energy efficiency, and increasing the use of low carbon fuels will help to reduce greenhouse gas emissions and ultimately to stabilize concentrations.

Second, greenhouse gas concentrations can be addressed by means of capturing and sequestering gases, either at the source or after they have been released into the atmosphere. Limited carbon capture is occurring today, using currently available technologies. Continued research and development is needed to explore advanced chemical and biological mechanisms to remove carbon dioxide from the atmosphere.

General Investment Criteria

The Presidents of the National Academy of Sciences, National Academy of Engineering, and the Institute of Medicine have provided some general principles for government investment in technology. In "Preparing for the 21st Century: Science and Technology Policy in a New Era" (October 23, 1997), the Presidents of the Academies offered criteria for such investment, including:

- Direct government investments in science and technology should be focused on long-range, broadly useful research in basic technology and science, both of which produce benefits far in excess of what private sector entities can capture for themselves.

- The federal government should cooperate with the private sector so that the United States maintains a position of leadership in those technologies that promise to have a major and continuing impact on broad areas of industrial and economic performance.

- But the government need not invest in fields in which the private sector already has programs of development in place. Private firms have the primary responsibility for product development, but federal and state governments play an important role in enhancing the civilian technology base and its adoption through their economic, regulatory, and trade policies, their support for research and development, and their own procurement of technology.

- Maintaining U.S. leadership in science and technology despite budget constraints will require discipline in the allocation of resources for federal investments. Within the general constraints determined by national priorities, the selection of individual projects must reflect the highest standards of the scientific and technical community.

Assessing the Current State of U.S. Climate Change Technology Research

The U.S. government has funded research to develop several technologies that mitigate climate change. In general, these technologies are aimed at: increasing energy efficiency to reduce the amount of energy consumed for goods produced in the economy; creating opportunities to switch to fuels and products that emit relatively lower amounts of greenhouse gases; enhancing carbon removal and storage in terrestrial, ocean, and geological sinks; and exploring innovative concepts along unconventional paths to discover new ways to reduce greenhouse gas emissions, such as advanced biotechnology concepts.

In order to advance climate change technology research, President Bush will:

- Charge the Secretary of Commerce, the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, and the Secretary of Energy to evaluate the current state of U.S. climate change technology research and development and make recommendations for improvements.

Strengthening Basic Climate Change Technology Research

The development of certain climate change mitigation technologies may be impractical for the private sector. Such technologies have some unique characteristics, including instances where the:

- Benefits are too widely spread for any one company to recover its investment at a profit;
- Cost or risk is too great for any individual company to bear alone; or
- Potential benefits are too far in the future to pass the threshold of private investment criteria.

Yet these advanced concepts may have the greatest potential to reduce greenhouse gas emissions at very low cost. For example, technological advances in areas such as biotechnology offer the potential for dramatic innovations in many areas. An important technology is the development of bioreactors that can harness the potential of microbial communities, such as photosynthetic bacteria, to produce clean fuels such as hydrogen. These bioreactors can exploit our increasing understanding of the biochemical pathways of microbial communities. While these biotechnologies are currently producing higher value products, like pharmaceuticals, significant new scientific research will be required for the direct production of fuels.

Similarly, scientists have begun work on promising new technologies for the cost-effective capture and sequestration of carbon in terrestrial and marine ecosystems. These opportunities may provide other environmental benefits as well, such as improved soil quality, better retention of moisture and nutrients, and reduced soil erosion. Researchers at the Department of Energy, for example, are studying "mineral carbonization," a technique for turning gaseous CO_2 into an environmentally-benign mineral that could be used to refill mine pits in land reclamation efforts.

Research and development efforts to date show promise for several options. However, many options are still emerging concepts both in the United States and internationally. Estimates of their potential for mitigating climate change are large, but highly uncertain. Markets for these or other technologies will be developed if buyers have some assurance about the quantity and quality of the product they are purchasing. In addition, there are many scientific and technological challenges regarding costs, environmental impacts, and public acceptability that must be resolved before these climate mitigation technologies can reach their potential. How and how much to invest in these areas are questions that must be answered to ensure that we as a society can harness our technological resources and capabilities and find the most cost-effective and environmentally sound solutions to the risks posed by increasing atmospheric concentrations of greenhouse gases.

Therefore, President Bush has directed that the National Climate Change Technology Initiative will:

- Provide guidance on strengthening basic research at universities and national laboratories, including the development of the advanced mitigation technologies that offer the greatest promise for low-cost reductions of greenhouse gas emissions.

Enhancing Private-Public Partnerships

It is important to effectively use the technologies that are and will soon become available. For example, technologies designed to increase energy efficiency, such as industrial applications of combined heat and power (CHP), enable both the local generation of electricity and the efficient use of the byproduct heat. When the quantities of the heat and power produced are well matched to the requirements of an industrial plant or facility, total efficiency of the fuel utilization can reach 90 percent, avoiding significant emissions of CO_2.

Similarly, the United States can achieve significant reductions of energy consumption and the related emissions of greenhouse gases through building systems with integrated electronic sensors, "smart" windows, and computers to monitor, maintain, and manage building operations. Also, one of the most challenging and important elements of a comprehensive strategy to address long-term greenhouse gas emission reductions is to improve the efficiency of our transportation fleet. The development of higher efficiency, hybrid passenger vehicles is an important first step.

In addition to energy efficiency, there are opportunities to increase the use of fuels that emit fewer greenhouse gases. For example, increased use of biomass residues and development of herbaceous crops, like native American prairie switchgrass, can mitigate greenhouse gases from coal-fired power plants and reduce air toxic emissions. Similarly, biomass can be converted into simple chemicals and plastic substitutes from which a new chemical industry can be formed.

Currently, the Federal government has established partners in the private sector to advance these technologies. It is critical to enhance this role and ensure that partnerships with industry are directed toward the most mutually beneficial outcomes.

Therefore, President Bush has directed that the National Climate Change Technology Initiative will:

- Develop opportunities to enhance private-public partnerships in applied research and development to expedite innovative and cost-effective approaches to reduce greenhouse gas emissions.

Promoting Cutting Edge Technology

Cutting-edge technologies hold the promise of helping to reduce emissions of greenhouse gases. For instance, geothermal power plants have a proven record of performance for producing reliable base-load power with minimal environmental effects. However, substantial known resources have not been tapped. Advanced technology is being developed to make more geothermal resources economical over a larger portion of the country. In response to the electricity shortages in the West, a demonstration of the economic and environmental benefits of the next generation of geothermal power plant technology, such as improved condensers and heat exchangers, will spur new development. As much as 100 to 300 megawatts of additional geothermal power to replace combustion-fired facilities will become available at new and existing plants within the next two years.

Fuel cells, a product of America's space program, hold great promise for reducing emissions. As noted in the National Energy Policy, the first generation fuel cells for stationary power applications entered commercial markets in 1995 and the second generation is currently in the demonstration phase. Innovative demonstration projects will reduce the high cost of this technology and offer a great potential to meet our energy needs.

Therefore, President Bush has directed that the National Climate Change Technology Initiative will:

- Make recommendations for funding demonstration projects for cutting-edge technologies.

Technology for Measuring and Monitoring Gross and Net Emissions

A fundamental challenge in attracting private sector investment to land-based greenhouse gas emission reduction or carbon sequestration projects is the ability to accurately quantify the net changes. Private sector investors are reluctant to participate in projects without reliable and credible quantification of the uncertainties associated with different land management practices. Cost effective measurement systems will not only increase the attractiveness of agricultural greenhouse gas projects to investors, but can also provide valuable information to individual farmers and ranchers in optimizing the use of fuel, fertilizers and other substances.

Significant advances in the science of remote sensing, coupled with land-based measurements, create new opportunities to monitor and verify greenhouse gas emissions. New and improved sensors that can be mounted on earth observing satellites and high altitude aircraft can deliver a unique capability to regularly monitor greenhouse gases with high accuracy, including carbon dioxide, methane, and ozone. This effort requires collaboration between the federal government and the private sector.

Therefore, President Bush has directed that the National Climate Change Technology Initiative will:

- Develop improved technologies for measuring and monitoring gross and net greenhouse gas emissions.

ADVANCING THE SCIENCE OF CLIMATE CHANGE

"MY CABINET-LEVEL WORKING GROUP HAS MET REGULARLY FOR THE LAST TEN WEEKS TO REVIEW THE MOST RECENT, MOST ACCURATE, AND MOST COMPREHENSIVE SCIENCE. THEY HAVE HEARD FROM SCIENTISTS OFFERING A WIDE SPECTRUM OF VIEWS; THEY HAVE REVIEWED THE FACTS, AND THEY HAVE LISTENED TO MANY THEORIES AND SUPPOSITIONS. THE WORKING GROUP ASKED THE HIGHLY RESPECTED NATIONAL ACADEMY OF SCIENCES TO PROVIDE US THE MOST UP-TO-DATE INFORMATION ABOUT WHAT IS KNOWN – AND WHAT IS NOT KNOWN – ON THE SCIENCE OF CLIMATE CHANGE…THE UNITED STATES [WILL] HELP LEAD THE WAY BY ADVANCING THE SCIENCE ON CLIMATE CHANGE."

-- PRESIDENT
GEORGE W. BUSH

Executive Summary

The United States leads the world in climate change research, spending more than the 15 nations of the European Union and Japan combined. Over the past decade, the United States has invested nearly $18 billion in such research and has increased our understanding of changes in climate, human links to these changes, and possible consequences.

To have the most up-to-date information of what is known and unknown about the science of climate change, the Cabinet-level climate change working group requested a report from the National Academy of Sciences (NAS). The NAS report identified substantial uncertainty in critical areas, such as:

- The feedbacks in the climate system that determine the magnitude and rate of temperature increases;
- The future usage of fossil fuels and the future emissions of methane;
- How much carbon is sequestered by oceans and other sinks and how much remains in the atmosphere;
- The details of regional climate change resulting from global climate change;
- The nature and causes of the natural variability of climate, its interactions with forced changes, and the direct and indirect effects of aerosols.

The National Academy of Sciences concluded, "[m]aking progress in reducing the large uncertainties in projections of future climate will require addressing a number of fundamental scientific questions relating to the buildup of greenhouse gases in the atmosphere and the behavior of the climate system."

To ensure that policies are shaped, and continue to be shaped, by the best science, President Bush will work aggressively to advance the science of climate change. Today, the President is announcing the U.S. Climate Change Research Initiative, which:

- Directs the Secretary of Commerce, working with other agencies, to set priorities for additional investments in climate change research, to review such investments, and to maximize coordination among federal agencies;
- Fully funds all priority research areas that the Secretary of Commerce's review finds are underfunded or need to be accelerated relative to other research;

- Challenges the major greenhouse gas emitting countries to increase significantly their investments in high priority areas of climate change research;
- Provides up to $25 million, and calls on other developed countries to provide matching funds, to help build climate observation systems in developing countries; and

- Proposes a joint venture with the EU, Japan and others to develop state-of-the-art climate modeling to help us better predict the causes and consequences of climate change.

U.S. Climate Research to Date

U.S. Global Change Research Program

The United States leads the world in climate change research, spending approximately $1.6 billion annually. The United States is responsible for half of the world's annual climate change research expenditures, three times more than the next largest contributor and larger than the contributions of Japan and all 15 nations of the European Union combined.

The U.S. Global Change Research Program (USGCRP) is a national research program that coordinates most of the federal government's research on climate change. Definition of the program began under the Reagan Administration; the program became a presidential initiative under President George Bush, and was codified by Congress in the Global Change Research Act of 1990.

Since its establishment in 1990, USGCRP has spent approximately $18 billion. The President's fiscal year 2002 budget requests $1.6 billion for USGCRP. One half of this investment is devoted to climate change science and the other half to associated satellite systems. During its first decade, USGCRP research activities have identified a series of global scale changes, including ozone depletion, climate change, and land cover change. USGCRP has also explored and categorized likely human links to these changes, improved forecasts of the El Nino-Southern Oscillation, and increased understanding of other climate changes. The USGCRP has also developed and deployed a series of remote sensing satellites that could form the basis of a global environmental observing system, and has developed models to analyze the climate process and produce scenarios of potential future climate change and possible consequences.

The USGCRP currently conducts research and observations in the following areas: Understanding the Earth's Climate System; Composition and Chemistry of the Atmosphere; Global Water Cycle; Carbon Cycle Science; Biology and Biochemistry of Ecosystems; Human Dimensions of Global Change; and Paleoenvironment/Paleoclimate (analysis of prehistoric changes in climate). Ten federal agencies participate in the USGCRP and their respective roles are described in Annex I.

Key Gaps in Science of Climate Change

Despite the United States' intensive investment in climate change science over the past decade, numerous gaps remain in our understanding of climate change. The National Academy of Sciences identified in its report, Climate Change Science: An Analysis of Some Key Questions (June 2001), critical uncertainties about the science of climate change. At the most fundamental level, the report indicated the need to better understand the causes of warming. The National Academy of Sciences stated, "Greenhouse gases are accumulating in Earth's atmosphere as a result of human activities, causing surface air temperatures and subsurface ocean temperatures to rise. Temperatures are, in fact, rising. The changes observed over the last several decades are likely mostly due to human activities, but we cannot rule out that some significant part of these changes are also a reflection of natural variability."

The National Academy of Sciences report goes on to identify a range of specific areas of scientific uncertainty that require additional study and research. These gaps include:

- How much carbon is sequestered by oceans and terrestrial sinks and how much remains in the atmosphere is uncertain:
  - ✓ "How land contributes, by location and processes, to exchanges of carbon with the atmosphere is still highly uncertain. . . ." (p. 11)
  - ✓ "These estimates [of future carbon dioxide climate forcings] . . . are only approximate because of uncertainty about how efficiently the ocean and terrestrial biosphere will sequester atmospheric CO_2." (p. 13)
  - ✓ "How much of the carbon from future use of fossil fuels will be seen as increases in carbon dioxide in the atmosphere will depend on what fractions are taken up by land and by the oceans. The exchanges with land occur on various time scales, out to centuries for soil decomposition in high latitudes, and they are sensitive to climate change. Their projection into the future is highly problematic." (p. 18)

- The feedbacks in the climate system that determine the magnitude and rate of temperature increases are uncertain:

- ✓ "Because there is considerable uncertainty in current understanding of how the climate system varies naturally and reacts to emissions of greenhouse gases and aerosols, current estimates of the magnitude of future warming should be regarded as tentative and subject to future adjustments (either upward or downward)." (p. 1)

- ✓ "Much of the difference in predictions of global warming by various climate models is attributable to the fact that each model represents these [feedback] processes in its own particular way. These uncertainties will remain until a more fundamental understanding of the processes that control atmospheric relative humidity and clouds is achieved." (p. 4)

- ➢ The direct and indirect effects of aerosols are uncertain:

  - ✓ "The greatest uncertainty about the aerosol climate forcing—indeed, the largest of all the uncertainties about global climate forcings—is probably the indirect effect of aerosols on clouds." (p. 14)
  - ✓ "The great uncertainty about this indirect aerosol climate forcing presents a severe handicap both for the interpretation of past climate change and for future assessments of climate changes." (p. 14)
  - ✓ "Climate forcing by anthropogenic aerosols is a large source of uncertainty about future climate change." (p. 13)
  - ✓ "Because of the scientific uncertainties associated with the sources and composition of carbonaceous aerosols, projections of future impacts on climate are difficult." (p. 12)

- ➢ The details and impacts of regional climate change resulting from global climate change are uncertain:

  - ✓ "On the regional scale and in the longer term, there is much more uncertainty" with respect to effects on agriculture and forestry. (p. 19)
  - ✓ "The Northern Hemisphere as a whole experienced a slight cooling from 1946-75, and the cooling during that period was quite marked over the eastern United States. The cause of this hiatus in the warming is still under debate." (p. 16)
  - ✓ "Health outcomes in response to climate change are the subject of intense debate. . . .The understanding of the relationships between weather/climate and human health is in its infancy and therefore the health consequences of climate change are poorly understood. The costs, benefits, and availability of resources for adaptation are also uncertain." (p. 20)
  - ✓ "Changes in storm frequency and intensity are one of the more uncertain elements of future climate change prediction." (p. 20)

- ➢ The nature and causes of the natural variability of climate and its interactions with forced changes are uncertain:

  - ✓ "Because of the large and still uncertain level of natural variability inherent in the climate record and the uncertainties in the time histories of the various forcing agents (and particularly aerosols), a causal linkage between the buildup of greenhouse gases in the atmosphere and the observed climate changes during the 20th century cannot be unequivocally established." (p. 17)

- ✓ The value of indirect effect of ozone changes induced by solar ultraviolet irradiance variations "remains highly uncertain." (p. 14)

- The future usage of fossil fuels and the future emissions of methane are uncertain:

  - ✓ "With a better understanding of the sources and sinks of methane, it may be possible to encourage practices . . . that lead to a decrease in atmospheric methane and significantly reduce future climate change." (p. 13)
  - ✓ "There is no definitive scientific basis for choosing among several possible explanations for these variations in the rates of change of global methane contributions, making it very difficult to predict its future atmospheric concentrations." (p. 11)

In response to these gaps in our knowledge, the National Academy of Sciences study also recommends, "research that couples physical, chemical biological and human systems; an improved capability of integrating scientific knowledge, including its uncertainty, into effective decision support systems, and an ability to conduct research at the regional or sectoral level that promotes analysis of the response of human and natural systems to multiple stresses."

The NAS report also indicates that to advance the understanding of climate change, it will be necessary to have "a global observing system in support of long term climate monitoring and prediction [and] concentration on large-scale modeling through increased, dedicated supercomputing and human resources." In addition to the recent National Academy of Sciences report, the USGCRP has updated its ten-year plan and submitted it to the National Research Council (NRC) for review. High priority areas for further research are identified in numerous recent reports and documents, such as: "Global Environmental Change: Research Pathways for the Next Decade" (NRC 1998), "Capacity of US Climate Modeling to Support Climate Change Assessment Activities" (NRC, 1998), "Adequacy of Climate Observing Systems" (NRC, 1999), and others.

Advancing the Science

The National Academy of Sciences report states that an "effective strategy for advancing the understanding of climate change will also require...efforts to ensure that climate research is supported and managed to assure innovation, effectiveness and efficiency." Over the decade of the USGCRP, interagency management of the program has weakened. The National Research Council in its report, "Global Environmental Change: Research Pathways for the Next Decade" (NRC 1998), identified the problem, and the USGCRP draft ten-year plan has proposed changes to the management structure. Such issues merit careful and high-level review, in consultation with the Congress.

Therefore, to advance the science of climate change and focus efforts on the many key areas of uncertainty, President Bush will:

- Direct the Secretary of Commerce, working with other agencies, to set priorities for additional investments in climate change research, to review such investments, and to maximize coordination among federal agencies.
- Fully fund all priority research areas that the review finds are underfunded or need to be accelerated relative to other research. Such areas could include the carbon cycle, climate modeling, and global water cycle.

The United States is making significant investments in the science of climate change and is pledging to accelerate its own research. Climate change is a global problem, however, and other nations must continue to advance the state of scientific knowledge.

The National Research Council, the US Global Change Research Program, and the World Meteorological Organization have all identified the building of a global observing system to monitor climate as being crucial to improving our understanding of the science of climate change. This system must include developing countries that have limited resources to make the necessary measurements.

The United States, Europe, and Japan each have significant climate modeling capabilities. The United States leads the world in the basic science of climate modeling, and Europe and Japan have built dedicated centers for climate modeling with a clearly defined mission.

Therefore, to enhance research, build a global climate observation system, and improve climate modeling, President Bush will:

- Challenge the major greenhouse gas emitting countries to increase significantly their investments in high priority areas of climate change research.
- Provide up to $25 million to help build climate observation systems in developing countries throughout the world, and call upon other developed countries to provide matching funds for such an investment.
- Propose a joint venture with the European Union, Japan and others to develop state-of-the-art climate modeling to help us better predict the causes and consequences of climate change.

Annex I

Agency Roles in the USGCRP

US Department of Agriculture: USDA-sponsored research focuses on understanding terrestrial systems and the effects of global change (including water balance, atmospheric deposition, vegetative quality, and UV-B radiation) on food, fiber, and forestry production in agricultural, forest, and range ecosystems. USDA estimates changes in carbon stocks on forests and agricultural lands and greenhouse gas emissions from agricultural sources, and performs research on how agricultural and forestry activities such as afforestation, changes in tillage practices, and bioenergy can contribute to a reduction in greenhouse gases.

Department of Commerce/National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA): NOAA's ground, ocean, and satellite observations, with an emphasis on oceanic and atmospheric dynamics, circulation, and chemistry, are an important part of the U.S. research program. They have resulted in improvements in climate modeling, prediction, and information management capabilities. NOAA also sponsors a wide range of studies on ocean-land-atmosphere interactions, the global hydrological cycle, and the role of global transfers of carbon dioxide among the atmosphere, ocean and terrestrial biosphere in climate change; the projection and assessment of variability across multiple timescales and the study of the relationship between the natural climate system and society and the development of methodologies for applying climate information to problems of social and economic consequences.

Department of Defense: The Department of Defense continues a history of participation in the USGCRP through sponsored research that concurrently satisfies national security requirements and stated goals of the USGCRP.

Department of Energy: Research supported by DOE's Office of Biological and Environmental Research (BER) addresses the effects of energy production and use on the global Earth system, primarily through studies of climate response. It includes research in climate modeling, atmospheric chemistry and transport, atmospheric properties and processes affecting the Earth's radiation balance and sources and sinks of energy-related greenhouse gases (primarily CO_2). It also includes research on the consequences of atmospheric and climatic changes on ecological systems and resources, critical data needs for the detection and attribution of climate change, tools and methods needed to conduct scientific assessments of climate change, and education and training of scientists and researchers in global change.

National Institutes of Health: Four NIH institutes support research on the health effects of UV and near-UV radiation. Their main objectives include increased understanding of the effects of UV and near-UV radiation exposure on target organs (e.g., eyes, skin, immune system) and of the molecular changes that lead to these effects, and the development of strategies to prevent the initiation or promotion of disease before it is clinically defined. National Institutes of Environmental Health Sciences (NIEHS) supports research on the health effects of chlorofluorocarbon replacement chemicals, including studies on the metabolism and toxicity of hydrochlorofluorocarbons and halogenated hydrocarbons.

Department of the Interior/U.S. Geological Survey (USGS): Research at USGS examines terrestrial and marine processes and the natural history of global change, including the interactions between climate and the hydrologic system. Studies seek to understand the character of past and present environments and the geological, biological, hydrological, and geochemical processes involved in environmental change.

Environmental Protection Agency: EPA's Global Change Research Program is an assessment-oriented program with primary emphasis on understanding the potential consequences of climate variability and change on human health, ecosystems, and socio-economic systems in the United States. This entails: (1) improving the scientific basis for evaluating effects of global change in the context of other stresses and human dimensions (as humans are catalysts of and respond to global change); (2) conducting assessments of the risks and opportunities presented by global change; and (3) assessing adaptation options to improve society's ability to effectively respond to the risks and opportunities presented by global change as they emerge.

National Aeronautics and Space Administration: NASA research efforts in global change involve space-based studies of the Earth as an integrated system, including research and satellite programs studying atmospheric chemistry and ozone; ocean surface winds, tropical precipitation and the global hydrological cycle and climate variability cycle; and the global carbon cycle, ocean biological productivity and land surface vegetation and ecosystems. The space-based activity complements ongoing ground-based research programs in the observation, understanding, and modeling of radiation, climate dynamics, and hydrology and water resources; ecosystem dynamics and biogeochemical cycles; atmospheric chemistry; and the processing, archiving, retrieval, dissemination, and use of global change data. The focus is Earth system science, which involves interdisciplinary research and coupled modeling. Development of algorithms for retrieval of the information content of space-based observations is carried out as part of the flight mission.

National Science Foundation: NSF global change research programs support research and related activities to advance the fundamental understanding of dynamic physical, biological, and socio-economic systems and the interactions among them. The programs encourage interdisciplinary activities with particular focus on Earth system processes and the consequences of change. NSF programs facilitate data acquisition and information management activities necessary for fundamental research on global change, promote the enhancement of models designed to improve our understanding of Earth system processes and interactions, and develop advanced analytic methods to facilitate basic research. NSF also supports fundamental research on the general processes used by organizations to identify and evaluate policies for mitigation, adaptation, and other responses to the challenge of varying environmental conditions.

Smithsonian Institution: The Smithsonian Institution program strives to improve knowledge of the natural processes involved in global climate change, to provide a long-term repository of climate-relevant research materials for present and future studies, and to bring this knowledge to various audiences, ranging from scholarly to lay public. The unique contribution of the Smithsonian Institution is a long-term perspective – e.g., undertaking investigations that may require extended study before producing useful results and conducting observations on sufficiently long (e.g. decadal) time-scales to resolve human-caused modification of natural variability.

Developing an Effective and Science Based Approach to Addressing Global Climate Change

Summary

- The Bush Administration is working with our allies to develop an effective and science-based approach to addressing global climate change. Global climate change is an issue that affects the entire world -- and it is an issue that must be addressed by the entire world.

- The surface temperature of the earth is warming and concentrations of greenhouse gases, especially CO2, have increased substantially since the beginning of the Industrial revolution – and the National Academy of Sciences indicates this increase is due in large part to human activity.

- The National Academy of Sciences report concludes that significant areas of uncertainty remain, including how much effect natural fluctuations in climate may have had on warming, how fast climate changes will occur, the magnitude of those changes, and their impacts.

- The Kyoto Protocol is fundamentally flawed:

  - Its targets have no scientific basis.
  - Kyoto's targets are unrealistic -- many countries will not achieve them.
  - Kyoto's targets are draconian -- requiring a 30% reduction in U.S. greenhouse gas emissions. Compliance with these targets could cause a 1% to 2% reduction in the United States GDP by 2010 – a reduction comparable to the oil shock of the 1970's – and would increase prices for consumers and cause layoffs of workers.
  - Kyoto is ineffective: it excludes developing countries, whose net emissions of greenhouse gases already exceed those of industrialized countries.

- While the U.S. rejects Kyoto, the President has committed the U.S. to a leadership role in addressing the issue of climate change.

- The U.S. already takes many proactive steps to address global climate change:

  - The U.S. spends $1.6 billion annually on climate science -- more than Japan and the 15 EU countries combined.
  - The U.S.' many initiatives have produced results -- the carbon-intensity of the economy has been lowered by 15% since 1990.
  - The President's Comprehensive National Energy Plan could further cut greenhouse gas emissions through conservation, improved energy efficiency, and increased reliance on natural gas, renewables, hydro and nuclear power.

- The President wants to increase the U.S.' efforts to address global climate change by:

  - Establishing the "U.S. Climate Change Research Initiative" to advance the science of climate change, focusing on key areas of uncertainty.

- ✓ Fully funds all priority research areas
- ✓ Challenges major greenhouse gas emitting countries to increase significantly their investments.
- ✓ Provides matching funds to help build climate observation systems in developing countries
- ✓ Proposes a joint venture with the EU, Japan and others to develop state-of-the-art climate modeling

- Launching the "National Climate Change Technology Initiative", tasking the Secretaries of Commerce and Energy to strengthen basic research and develop public-private partnerships to bring cutting edge technologies to market; and

- Increasing cooperative efforts within our hemisphere and globally, especially with developing countries, tasking the Secretary of State and others to build partnerships to measure and mitigate emissions, undertake research, and invest in forestation.

➢ The President directed the Cabinet-level climate change working group to consider approaches to reduce greenhouse gas emissions, drawing on the power of markets and the promise of technology. That effort will be guided by several basic principles:

- The approach must be consistent with the long-term goal of stabilizing concentrations of greenhouse gases in the atmosphere.
- Our actions should be measured, as we learn more and build on it.
- Our approach must be flexible to adjust to new information and take advantage of new technology.
- We must ensure continued economic growth in the U.S. and the world.
- We should pursue market-based incentives and spur technological innovation.
- And our approach must be based on global participation, including developing countries.

➢ The President directed Secretary Powell and EPA Administrator Whitman to work actively with friends and allies to explore common approaches to climate change consistent with these principles.

Jerusalem Embassy Act Waiver.

President Signs Jerusalem Embassy Act Waiver

- The President remains committed to beginning the process of moving the U.S. embassy in Israel to Jerusalem. However, he has concluded that moving the embassy now would be contrary to our national security interests.

- Moving the U.S. embassy now would complicate our ability to work with the parties to bring an end to the violence in the region.

- Under the Jerusalem Embassy Act, the President has the authority to suspend for six months certain budget limitations affecting the State Department if he determines that doing so is necessary to protect the national security interests of the United States.

- The President has decided to exercise this waiver authority. By law, he is required to do this by June 15, 2001.

- By signing this waiver, the President will prevent the State Department from losing significant funding necessary to protect our embassies worldwide.

- In this time of very real terrorist threats to U.S. missions and personnel abroad, the State Department must have access to the funds necessary to upgrade the security and operations of its missions worldwide.

Jerusalem Embassy Act Waiver.

President Signs Jerusalem Embassy Act Waiver

- The President remains committed to beginning the process of moving the U.S. embassy in Israel to Jerusalem. However, he has concluded that moving the embassy now would be contrary to our national security interests.

- Moving the U.S. embassy now would complicate our ability to work with the parties to bring an end to the violence in the region.

- Under the Jerusalem Embassy Act, the President has the authority to suspend for six months certain budget limitations affecting the State Department if he determines that doing so is necessary to protect the national security interests of the United States.

- The President has decided to exercise this waiver authority. By law, he is required to do this by June 15, 2001.

- By signing this waiver, the President will prevent the State Department from losing significant funding necessary to protect our embassies worldwide.

- In this time of very real terrorist threats to U.S. missions and personnel abroad, the State Department must have access to the funds necessary to upgrade the security and operations of its missions worldwide.

President Signs Jerusalem Embassy Act Waiver

- The President remains committed to beginning the process of moving the U.S. embassy in Israel to Jerusalem. However, he has concluded that moving the embassy now would be contrary to our national security interests.

- Moving the U.S. embassy now would complicate our ability to work with the parties to bring an end to the violence in the region.

- Under the Jerusalem Embassy Act, the President has the authority to suspend for six months certain budget limitations affecting the State Department if he determines that doing so is necessary to protect the national security interests of the United States.

- The President has decided to exercise this waiver authority. By law, he is required to do this by June 15, 2001.

- By signing this waiver, the President will prevent the State Department from losing significant funding necessary to protect our embassies worldwide.

- In this time of very real terrorist threats to U.S. missions and personnel abroad, the State Department must have access to the funds necessary to upgrade the security and operations of its missions worldwide.

President Signs Jerusalem Embassy Act Waiver

- The President remains committed to beginning the process of moving the U.S. embassy in Israel to Jerusalem. However, he has concluded that moving the embassy now would be contrary to our national security interests.

- Moving the U.S. embassy now would complicate our ability to work with the parties to bring an end to the violence in the region.

- Under the Jerusalem Embassy Act, the President has the authority to suspend for six months certain budget limitations affecting the State Department if he determines that doing so is necessary to protect the national security interests of the United States.

- The President has decided to exercise this waiver authority. By law, he is required to do this by June 15, 2001.

- By signing this waiver, the President will prevent the State Department from losing significant funding necessary to protect our embassies worldwide.

- In this time of very real terrorist threats to U.S. missions and personnel abroad, the State Department must have access to the funds necessary to upgrade the security and operations of its missions worldwide.

President Signs Jerusalem Embassy Act Waiver

- The President remains committed to beginning the process of moving the U.S. embassy in Israel to Jerusalem. However, he has concluded that moving the embassy now would be contrary to our national security interests.

- Moving the U.S. embassy now would complicate our ability to work with the parties to bring an end to the violence in the region.

- Under the Jerusalem Embassy Act, the President has the authority to suspend for six months certain budget limitations affecting the State Department if he determines that doing so is necessary to protect the national security interests of the United States.

- The President has decided to exercise this waiver authority. By law, he is required to do this by June 15, 2001.

- By signing this waiver, the President will prevent the State Department from losing significant funding necessary to protect our embassies worldwide.

- In this time of very real terrorist threats to U.S. missions and personnel abroad, the State Department must have access to the funds necessary to upgrade the security and operations of its missions worldwide.

President Signs Jerusalem Embassy Act Waiver

- The President remains committed to beginning the process of moving the U.S. embassy in Israel to Jerusalem. However, he has concluded that moving the embassy now would be contrary to our national security interests.

- Moving the U.S. embassy now would complicate our ability to work with the parties to bring an end to the violence in the region.

- Under the Jerusalem Embassy Act, the President has the authority to suspend for six months certain budget limitations affecting the State Department if he determines that doing so is necessary to protect the national security interests of the United States.

- The President has decided to exercise this waiver authority. By law, he is required to do this by June 15, 2001.

- By signing this waiver, the President will prevent the State Department from losing significant funding necessary to protect our embassies worldwide.

- In this time of very real terrorist threats to U.S. missions and personnel abroad, the State Department must have access to the funds necessary to upgrade the security and operations of its missions worldwide.

Talking points are attached on the President's signing today of the Jerusalem Embassy Act Waiver.

President Signs Jerusalem Embassy Act Waiver

- The President remains committed to beginning the process of moving the U.S. embassy in Israel to Jerusalem. However, he has concluded that moving the embassy now would be contrary to our national security interests.

- Moving the U.S. embassy now would complicate our ability to work with the parties to bring an end to the violence in the region.

- Under the Jerusalem Embassy Act, the President has the authority to suspend for six months certain budget limitations affecting the State Department if he determines that doing so is necessary to protect the national security interests of the United States.

- The President has decided to exercise this waiver authority. By law, he is required to do this by June 15, 2001.

- By signing this waiver, the President will prevent the State Department from losing significant funding necessary to protect our embassies worldwide.

- In this time of very real terrorist threats to U.S. missions and personnel abroad, the State Department must have access to the funds necessary to upgrade the security and operations of its missions worldwide.

We have discussed and approved. We need to be sure CR does not (i) charge admission for the event to its members or (ii) use the event as a membership tool in the period between now and the time of the event. Please keep me in the loop as we move ahead. Thanks.

Any chance to help these guys get this reception? The College Republicans were always short changed under Bush 41 and Reagan (though we did get to run his birthday party). Can you guide me as to how to work this through the system? Thanks Susan.

<<presandveepinvite.doc>> Dear Jack,

Once again, I really appreciate your willingness to help. You have not forgotten where you came from and it certainly matters to the CRs.
We are looking for a reception in the White House or on the grounds of some kind from 5-7 pm on Friday June 29, 2001 for approximately 100 CR activists.
The group would consist of all state chairmen, present and future national officers and a few guests. I need not tell you the impact that such a gesture would have on these people. They would wed the College Republicans to the president in an unprecedented way.
I am forwarding on to you the letters requesting that the President and the Vice President speak to the convention. The Vice President said no and the President has yet to respond. Karl Rove and is speaking during the day. We have not requested any such reception through any official channels yet. Hopefully, you can guide us in the right direction for that and possibly put in a good word. I will ask Ralph Reed for the same.
I look forward to seeing you at the convention at the end of the month.

2. On Olson, how about: "I am interested in how the Solicitor General interacts with the Attorney General and the President on particularly controversial cases. On the one hand, the SG is by tradition somewhat independent; on the other hand, the SG works for the President and Attorney General. How will you approach and deal with that tension?"

What did you do with those binders you prepared for the 1st slate of nominees? Were those just for the use of the supporter groups, or did they go to the Hill with the nomination?

What do you think about writing down our policy on reimbursing unofficial travel of the First Lady? See message below.

Merrill,

In order to bill as requested, this office requires a memorandum either from your office (thru legal counsel) or from legal counsel stating the current administration policy on reimbursement of Official and Unofficial travel for the First Lady.

The Trip Summaries I just received from you for First Lady are all official. Are any of them supposed to say personal?? If they are official, you won't need airfare rates as official travel is non-reimbursable.

FYI. Historically, the median coach or business class rate has been the most used method for non-campaign travel by the principals. As a reminder, the COST of flying the C-20 (most often used aircraft by First Lady) is $3,573 per hour for FY01.

Nancy--

As we discussed today, when Mrs. Bush travels on personal business, Airlift Ops should seek reimbursement for the fare of the least expensive coach ticket (including any discount for a 2-week or 21-day advance purchase). I confirmed with Jack Shayegan in the travel office that he would be able to provide such discounted fares, even after the fact. Please send a list of these fares to me for those personal trips for which we have provided trip summaries. Any and all outstanding trip summaries will follow shortly.

Thanks,
Merrill

The Flawed Kyoto Protocol:
Rejected By The Senate 95-0

"Economists from the Clinton White House now concede that complying with Kyoto's mandatory reductions in greenhouse gases would be difficult - and more expensive to American consumers than they thought when they were in charge." (Jonathan Weisman, "Ex-Clinton Aides Admit Kyoto Treaty Flawed," USA Today, June 12, 2001)

The U.S. Senate - Which Must Ratify All Treaties - Unanimously Stated Its Displeasure With The Kyoto Protocol In 1997:

ú In 1997, The U.S. Senate Expressed The Sense Of The Senate, By A 95-0 Vote, That It Would Not Ratify Any Treaty That Would Damage The U.S. Economy Or Unfairly Regulate Developed Countries. (S. Res. 98, Roll Call #205: Resolution Agreed To 95-0: R 54-0; D 41-0, July 25, 1997)

ú Democrat Senator Robert Byrd Said That The Exemption Of Developing Countries Spelled Trouble For America. "If you want to really kill this treaty, abide by the Berlin Mandate and let the developing countries off the hook until some future time. That is what will surely kill the treaty, and I will join in stabbing it in the heart, if that is the case. If that treaty comes back here and the developing countries are left off the hook, count me in on the assassination of the treaty. It will be done in public view. It won't be behind a bush." (Senator Byrd, Congressional Record, July 25, 1997) (emphasis added)

Former Aides To President Clinton Admitted That The Kyoto Protocol Is Flawed
And That Support For The Treaty Has Stalled Over Time:

ú USA Today Reported That The Clinton Administration's Global Warming
Coordinator Now Admits China - The World's Largest Nation - Will Not Ratify The Kyoto Protocol Any Time Soon. "Todd Stern, Clinton's global warming coordinator, says that the Europeans would likely go along with an unlimited
trading system if the Bush administration would return to the negotiating table to produce a revised treaty it could sign. However, he concedes that China won't participate for now." (Jonathan Weisman, "Ex-Clinton Aides Admit Kyoto Treaty Flawed," USA Today, June 12, 2001) (emphasis added)

ú Joseph Aldy, Who Helped Develop The Kyoto Protocol Compliance Cost Estimates, Admits The Clinton Administration Was "Uneasy" About Their Position From The Beginning. "We always thought the (emissions) targets were very ambitious. . . . But the thing that made us really uneasy about our analysis . . . was that if our assumptions didn't come true, you could come out with costs that were much, much higher." (Jonathan Weisman, "Ex-Clinton Aides Admit Kyoto Treaty Flawed," USA Today, June 12, 2001) (emphasis added)

Compliance Costs Would Be Disastrous For American Consumers:

ú President Clinton's Own Department Of Energy Predicted Catastrophic
Gasoline And Electricity Price Increases If America Ratified The Kyoto Protocol. "[T]he [Department of Energy] report estimates that, in 2010: Gasoline prices would likely increase about 66 cents per gallon, from an anticipated baseline price of $1.25 without the Protocol's restrictions to $1.91 a gallon; and electricity would cost 86.4 percent more than it would otherwise." (Alexander F. Annett, "The Department Of Energy's Report On The Impact Of Kyoto," The Heritage Foundation, October 23, 1998; original data from "Impacts Of The Kyoto Protocol On U.S. Energy Markets And Economic Activity," U.S. Department Of Energy, Energy Information Administration, October 1998) (emphasis added)

Among Major Industrialized Countries, Only Romania Has Ratified The Kyoto Protocol:

ú As Of May 9, 2001, Only 34 Countries Have Ratified The Agreement. While China, India, Brazil and other nations have yet to ratify Kyoto, the agreement has been ratified by Mauritius, Lesotho, Tuvalu and the Federal States of Micronesia. (U.N. Framework Convention On Climate Change Website, www.unfccc.int, June 12, 2001)

ú China And India - Two Of The Top Global Emitters Of Greenhouse Gases- Are Exempt From The Provisions Of The Kyoto Treaty. (Bill Sammon, "Bush Hits Others For Global Warming," The Washington Times, June 12, 2001)

ú No European Union Country Has Ratified The Kyoto Agreement. "Ever since President Bush announced that the United States would not support the Kyoto Protocol, European leaders have attacked him relentlessly for this decision, even resorting to petty name-calling. Their protests are hypocritical. Notwithstanding their purported commitment to the Protocol, no EU country has ratified the treaty. Moreover, studies suggest that emissions in Europe will increase over the next 10 years." (Charli E. Coon, "Why President Bush Is Right To Abandon The Kyoto Protocol," The Heritage Foundation, Backgrounder #1437, May 11, 2001) (emphasis added)

A Brookings Institution Expert Denounces The Kyoto Protocol As Implausible:

ú Warwick McKibbin, A Senior Fellow At The Brookings Institution, Says That The Kyoto Protocol Will Never Work. ". . . [T]he mechanisms within the Protocol are too complex and require too many new institutional developments to be plausible. . . . [T]he Kyoto Protocol is never going to work because it is the wrong approach to tackling the climate change issue." (Warwick W. McKibbin, "Moving Beyond Kyoto," The Brookings Institution, October, 2000) (emphasis added)

The Flawed Kyoto Protocol:
Rejected By The Senate 95-0

"Economists from the Clinton White House now concede that complying with Kyoto's mandatory reductions in greenhouse gases would be difficult - and more expensive to American consumers than they thought when they were in charge." (Jonathan Weisman, "Ex-Clinton Aides Admit Kyoto Treaty Flawed," USA Today, June 12, 2001)

The U.S. Senate - Which Must Ratify All Treaties - Unanimously Stated Its Displeasure With The Kyoto Protocol In 1997:

ú In 1997, The U.S. Senate Expressed The Sense Of The Senate, By A 95-0 Vote, That It Would Not Ratify Any Treaty That Would Damage The U.S. Economy Or Unfairly Regulate Developed Countries. (S. Res. 98, Roll Call #205: Resolution Agreed To 95-0: R 54-0; D 41-0, July 25, 1997)

ú Democrat Senator Robert Byrd Said That The Exemption Of Developing Countries Spelled Trouble For America. "If you want to really kill this treaty, abide by the Berlin Mandate and let the developing countries off the
hook until some future time. That is what will surely kill the treaty, and I will join in stabbing it in the heart, if that is the case. If that treaty comes back here and the developing countries are left off the hook, count me in on the assassination of the treaty. It will be done in public view. It won't be behind a bush." (Senator Byrd, Congressional Record, July 25, 1997) (emphasis added)

Former Aides To President Clinton Admitted That The Kyoto Protocol Is Flawed
And That Support For The Treaty Has Stalled Over Time:

ú USA Today Reported That The Clinton Administration's Global Warming
Coordinator Now Admits China - The World's Largest Nation - Will Not Ratify The Kyoto Protocol Any Time Soon. "Todd Stern, Clinton's global warming coordinator, says that the Europeans would likely go along with an unlimited
trading system if the Bush administration would return to the negotiating table to produce a revised treaty it could sign. However, he concedes that China won't participate for now." (Jonathan Weisman, "Ex-Clinton Aides Admit Kyoto Treaty Flawed," USA Today, June 12, 2001) (emphasis added)

ú Joseph Aldy, Who Helped Develop The Kyoto Protocol Compliance Cost Estimates, Admits The Clinton Administration Was "Uneasy" About Their Position From The Beginning. "We always thought the (emissions) targets were very ambitious. . . . But the thing that made us really uneasy about our analysis . . . was that if our assumptions didn't come true, you could come out with costs that were much, much higher." (Jonathan Weisman, "Ex-Clinton Aides Admit Kyoto Treaty Flawed," USA Today, June 12, 2001) (emphasis added)

Compliance Costs Would Be Disastrous For American Consumers:

ú President Clinton's Own Department Of Energy Predicted Catastrophic
Gasoline And Electricity Price Increases If America Ratified The Kyoto Protocol. "[T]he [Department of Energy] report estimates that, in 2010: Gasoline prices would likely increase about 66 cents per gallon, from an anticipated baseline price of $1.25 without the Protocol's restrictions to $1.91 a gallon; and electricity would cost 86.4 percent more than it would otherwise." (Alexander F. Annett, "The Department Of Energy's Report On The Impact Of Kyoto," The Heritage Foundation, October 23, 1998; original data from "Impacts Of The Kyoto Protocol On U.S. Energy Markets And Economic Activity," U.S. Department Of Energy, Energy Information Administration, October 1998) (emphasis added)

Among Major Industrialized Countries, Only Romania Has Ratified The Kyoto Protocol:

ú As Of May 9, 2001, Only 34 Countries Have Ratified The Agreement. While China, India, Brazil and other nations have yet to ratify Kyoto, the agreement has been ratified by Mauritius, Lesotho, Tuvalu and the Federal States of Micronesia. (U.N. Framework Convention On Climate Change Website, www.unfccc.int, June 12, 2001)

ú China And India - Two Of The Top Global Emitters Of Greenhouse Gases- Are Exempt From The Provisions Of The Kyoto Treaty. (Bill Sammon, "Bush Hits Others For Global Warming," The Washington Times, June 12, 2001)

ú No European Union Country Has Ratified The Kyoto Agreement. "Ever since President Bush announced that the United States would not support the Kyoto Protocol, European leaders have attacked him relentlessly for this decision, even resorting to petty name-calling. Their protests are hypocritical. Notwithstanding their purported commitment to the Protocol, no EU country has ratified the treaty. Moreover, studies suggest that emissions in Europe will increase over the next 10 years." (Charli E. Coon, "Why President Bush Is Right To Abandon The Kyoto Protocol," The Heritage Foundation, Backgrounder #1437, May 11, 2001) (emphasis added)

A Brookings Institution Expert Denounces The Kyoto Protocol As Implausible:

ú Warwick McKibbin, A Senior Fellow At The Brookings Institution, Says That The Kyoto Protocol Will Never Work. ". . . [T]he mechanisms within the Protocol are too complex and require too many new institutional developments to be plausible. . . . [T]he Kyoto Protocol is never going to work because it is the wrong approach to tackling the climate change issue." (Warwick W. McKibbin, "Moving Beyond Kyoto," The Brookings Institution, October, 2000) (emphasis added)

Former Aides To President Clinton Admitted That The Kyoto Protocol Is Flawed And That Support For The Treaty Has Stalled Over Time:

- USA Today* Reported That The Clinton Administration's Global Warming Coordinator Now Admits China – The World's Largest Nation – Will Not Ratify The Kyoto Protocol Any Time Soon. "Todd Stern, Clinton's global warming coordinator, says that the Europeans would likely go along with an unlimited trading system if the Bush administration would return to the negotiating table to produce a revised treaty it could sign. However, he concedes that China won't participate for now." (Jonathan Weisman, "Ex-Clinton Aides Admit Kyoto Treaty Flawed," USA Today, June 12, 2001) (emphasis added)

- Joseph Aldy, Who Helped Develop The Kyoto Protocol Compliance Cost Estimates, Admits The Clinton Administration Was "Uneasy" About Their Position From The

Beginning. "We always thought the (emissions) targets were very ambitious. . . . But the thing that made us really uneasy about our analysis . . . was that if our assumptions didn't come true, you could come out with costs that were much, much higher." (Jonathan Weisman, "Ex-Clinton Aides Admit Kyoto Treaty Flawed," USA Today, June 12, 2001) (emphasis added)

Compliance Costs Would Be Disastrous For American Consumers:

- President Clinton's Own Department Of Energy Predicted Catastrophic Gasoline And Electricity Price Increases If America Ratified The Kyoto Protocol. "[T]he [Department of Energy] report estimates that, in 2010: Gasoline prices would likely increase about 66 cents per gallon, from an anticipated baseline price of $1.25 without the Protocol's restrictions to $1.91 a gallon; and electricity would cost 86.4 percent more than it would otherwise." (Alexander F. Annett, "The Department Of Energy's Report On The Impact Of Kyoto," The Heritage Foundation, October 23, 1998; original data from "Impacts Of The Kyoto Protocol On U.S. Energy Markets And Economic Activity," U.S. Department Of Energy, Energy Information Administration, October 1998) (emphasis added)

Among Major Industrialized Countries, Only Romania Has Ratified The Kyoto Protocol:

- As Of May 9, 2001, Only 34 Countries Have Ratified The Agreement. While China, India, Brazil and other nations have yet to ratify Kyoto, the agreement has been ratified by Mauritius, Lesotho, Tuvalu and the Federal States of Micronesia. (U.N. Framework Convention On Climate Change Website, www.unfccc.int, June 12, 2001)

- China And India – Two Of The Top Global Emitters Of Greenhouse Gases – Are Exempt From The Provisions Of The Kyoto Treaty. (Bill Sammon, "Bush Hits Others For Global Warming," The Washington Times, June 12, 2001)

- No European Union Country Has Ratified The Kyoto Agreement. "Ever since President Bush announced that the United States would not support the Kyoto Protocol, European leaders have attacked him relentlessly for this decision, even resorting to petty name-calling. Their protests are hypocritical. Notwithstanding their purported commitment to the Protocol, no EU country has ratified the treaty. Moreover, studies suggest that emissions in Europe will increase over the next 10 years." (Charli E. Coon, "Why President Bush Is Right To Abandon The Kyoto Protocol," The Heritage Foundation, Backgrounder #1437, May 11, 2001) (emphasis added)

A Brookings Institution Expert Denounces The Kyoto Protocol As Implausible:

- Warwick McKibbin, A Senior Fellow At The Brookings Institution, Says That The Kyoto Protocol Will Never Work. ". . . [T]he mechanisms within the Protocol are too complex and require too many new institutional developments to be plausible. . . . [T]he Kyoto Protocol is never going to work because it is the wrong approach to tackling the climate change issue." (Warwick W. McKibbin, "Moving Beyond Kyoto," The Brookings Institution, October, 2000) (emphasis added)

The Flawed Kyoto Protocol:
Rejected By The Senate 95-0

"Economists from the Clinton White House now concede that complying with Kyoto's mandatory reductions in greenhouse gases would be difficult - and more expensive to American consumers than they thought when they were in charge." (Jonathan Weisman, "Ex-Clinton Aides Admit Kyoto Treaty Flawed," USA Today, June 12, 2001)

The U.S. Senate - Which Must Ratify All Treaties - Unanimously Stated Its Displeasure With The Kyoto Protocol In 1997:

ú In 1997, The U.S. Senate Expressed The Sense Of The Senate, By A 95-0 Vote, That It Would Not Ratify Any Treaty That Would Damage The U.S. Economy Or Unfairly Regulate Developed Countries. (S. Res. 98, Roll Call #205: Resolution Agreed To 95-0: R 54-0; D 41-0, July 25, 1997)

ú Democrat Senator Robert Byrd Said That The Exemption Of Developing Countries Spelled Trouble For America. "If you want to really kill this treaty, abide by the Berlin Mandate and let the developing countries off the
hook until some future time. That is what will surely kill the treaty, and I will join in stabbing it in the heart, if that is the case. If that treaty comes back here and the developing countries are left off the hook, count me in on the assassination of the treaty. It will be done in public view. It won't be behind a bush." (Senator Byrd, Congressional Record, July 25, 1997) (emphasis added)

Former Aides To President Clinton Admitted That The Kyoto Protocol Is Flawed
And That Support For The Treaty Has Stalled Over Time:

ú USA Today Reported That The Clinton Administration's Global Warming
Coordinator Now Admits China - The World's Largest Nation - Will Not Ratify The Kyoto Protocol Any Time Soon. "Todd Stern, Clinton's global warming coordinator, says that the Europeans would likely go along with an unlimited
trading system if the Bush administration would return to the negotiating table to produce a revised treaty it could sign. However, he concedes that China won't participate for now." (Jonathan Weisman, "Ex-Clinton Aides Admit Kyoto Treaty Flawed," USA Today, June 12, 2001) (emphasis added)

ú Joseph Aldy, Who Helped Develop The Kyoto Protocol Compliance Cost Estimates, Admits The Clinton Administration Was "Uneasy" About Their Position From The Beginning. "We always thought the (emissions) targets were very ambitious. . . . But the thing that made us really uneasy about our analysis . . . was that if our assumptions didn't come true, you could come out with costs that were much, much higher." (Jonathan Weisman, "Ex-Clinton Aides Admit Kyoto Treaty Flawed," USA Today, June 12, 2001) (emphasis added)

Compliance Costs Would Be Disastrous For American Consumers:

ú President Clinton's Own Department Of Energy Predicted Catastrophic
Gasoline And Electricity Price Increases If America Ratified The Kyoto Protocol. "[T]he [Department of Energy] report estimates that, in 2010: Gasoline prices would likely increase about 66 cents per gallon, from an anticipated baseline price of $1.25 without the Protocol's restrictions to $1.91 a gallon; and electricity would cost 86.4 percent more than it would otherwise." (Alexander F. Annett, "The Department Of Energy's Report On The Impact Of Kyoto," The Heritage Foundation, October 23, 1998; original data from "Impacts Of The Kyoto Protocol On U.S. Energy Markets And Economic Activity," U.S. Department Of Energy, Energy Information Administration, October 1998) (emphasis added)

Among Major Industrialized Countries, Only Romania Has Ratified The Kyoto Protocol:

ú As Of May 9, 2001, Only 34 Countries Have Ratified The Agreement. While China, India, Brazil and other nations have yet to ratify Kyoto, the agreement has been ratified by Mauritius, Lesotho, Tuvalu and the Federal States of Micronesia. (U.N. Framework Convention On Climate Change Website, www.unfccc.int, June 12, 2001)

ú China And India - Two Of The Top Global Emitters Of Greenhouse Gases- Are Exempt From The Provisions Of The Kyoto Treaty. (Bill Sammon, "Bush Hits Others For Global Warming," The Washington Times, June 12, 2001)

ú No European Union Country Has Ratified The Kyoto Agreement. "Ever since President Bush announced that the United States would not support the Kyoto Protocol, European leaders have attacked him relentlessly for this decision, even resorting to petty name-calling. Their protests are hypocritical. Notwithstanding their purported commitment to the Protocol, no EU country has ratified the treaty. Moreover, studies suggest that emissions in Europe will increase over the next 10 years." (Charli E. Coon, "Why President Bush Is Right To Abandon The Kyoto Protocol," The Heritage Foundation, Backgrounder #1437, May 11, 2001) (emphasis added)

A Brookings Institution Expert Denounces The Kyoto Protocol As Implausible:

ú Warwick McKibbin, A Senior Fellow At The Brookings Institution, Says That The Kyoto Protocol Will Never Work. ". . . [T]he mechanisms within the Protocol are too complex and require too many new institutional developments to be plausible. . . . [T]he Kyoto Protocol is never going to work because it is the wrong approach to tackling the climate change issue." (Warwick W. McKibbin, "Moving Beyond Kyoto," The Brookings Institution, October, 2000) (emphasis added)

RNC RESEARCH BRIEFING

RNCResearch@rnchq.org

June 13, 2001

Rejected By The Senate 95-0

"Economists from the Clinton White House now concede that complying with Kyoto's mandatory reductions in greenhouse gases would be difficult – and more expensive to American consumers than they thought when they were in charge." (Jonathan Weisman, "Ex-Clinton Aides Admit Kyoto Treaty Flawed," USA Today, June 12, 2001)

The U.S. Senate – Which Must Ratify All Treaties – Unanimously Stated Its Displeasure With The Kyoto Protocol In 1997:

- In 1997, The U.S. Senate Expressed The Sense Of The Senate, By A 95-0 Vote, That It Would Not Ratify Any Treaty That Would Damage The U.S. Economy Or Unfairly Regulate Developed Countries. (S. Res. 98, Roll Call #205: Resolution Agreed To 95-0: R 54-0; D 41-0, July 25, 1997)

- Democrat Senator Robert Byrd Said That The Exemption Of Developing Countries Spelled Trouble For America. "If you want to really kill this treaty, abide by the Berlin Mandate and let the developing countries off the hook until some future time. That is what will surely kill the treaty, and I will join in stabbing it in the heart, if that is the case. If that treaty comes back here and the developing countries are left off the hook, count me in on the assassination of the treaty. It will be done in public view. It won't be behind a bush." (Senator Byrd, Congressional Record, July 25, 1997) (emphasis added)

Former Aides To President Clinton Admitted That The Kyoto Protocol Is Flawed And That Support For The Treaty Has Stalled Over Time:

- USA Today* Reported That The Clinton Administration's Global Warming Coordinator Now Admits China – The World's Largest Nation – Will Not Ratify The Kyoto Protocol Any Time Soon. "Todd Stern, Clinton's global warming coordinator, says that the Europeans would likely go along with an unlimited trading system if the Bush administration would return to the negotiating table to produce a revised treaty it could sign. However, he concedes that China won't participate for now." (Jonathan Weisman, "Ex-Clinton Aides Admit Kyoto Treaty Flawed," USA Today, June 12, 2001) (emphasis added)

- Joseph Aldy, Who Helped Develop The Kyoto Protocol Compliance Cost Estimates, Admits The Clinton Administration Was "Uneasy" About Their Position From The

Beginning. "We always thought the (emissions) targets were very ambitious. . . . But the thing that made us really uneasy about our analysis . . . was that if our assumptions didn't come true, you could come out with costs that were much, much higher." (Jonathan Weisman, "Ex-Clinton Aides Admit Kyoto Treaty Flawed," USA Today, June 12, 2001) (emphasis added)

Compliance Costs Would Be Disastrous For American Consumers:

- President Clinton's Own Department Of Energy Predicted Catastrophic Gasoline And Electricity Price Increases If America Ratified The Kyoto Protocol. "[T]he [Department of Energy] report estimates that, in 2010: Gasoline prices would likely increase about 66 cents per gallon, from an anticipated baseline price of $1.25 without the Protocol's restrictions to $1.91 a gallon; and electricity would cost 86.4 percent more than it would otherwise." The Flawed Kyoto Protocol:
Rejected By The Senate 95-0

"Economists from the Clinton White House now concede that complying with Kyoto's mandatory reductions in greenhouse gases would be difficult - and more expensive to American consumers than they thought when they were in charge." (Jonathan Weisman, "Ex-Clinton Aides Admit Kyoto Treaty Flawed," USA Today, June 12, 2001)

The U.S. Senate - Which Must Ratify All Treaties - Unanimously Stated Its Displeasure With The Kyoto Protocol In 1997:

ú In 1997, The U.S. Senate Expressed The Sense Of The Senate, By A 95-0 Vote, That It Would Not Ratify Any Treaty That Would Damage The U.S. Economy Or Unfairly Regulate Developed Countries. (S. Res. 98, Roll Call #205: Resolution Agreed To 95-0: R 54-0; D 41-0, July 25, 1997)

ú Democrat Senator Robert Byrd Said That The Exemption Of Developing Countries Spelled Trouble For America. "If you want to really kill this treaty, abide by the Berlin Mandate and let the developing countries off the
hook until some future time. That is what will surely kill the treaty, and I will join in stabbing it in the heart, if that is the case. If that treaty comes back here and the developing countries are left off the hook, count me in on the assassination of the treaty. It will be done in public view. It won't be behind a bush." (Senator Byrd, Congressional Record, July 25, 1997) (emphasis added)

Former Aides To President Clinton Admitted That The Kyoto Protocol Is Flawed
And That Support For The Treaty Has Stalled Over Time:

ú USA Today Reported That The Clinton Administration's Global Warming
Coordinator Now Admits China - The World's Largest Nation - Will Not Ratify The Kyoto Protocol Any Time Soon. "Todd Stern, Clinton's global warming coordinator, says that the Europeans would likely go along with an unlimited
trading system if the Bush administration would return to the negotiating table to produce a revised treaty it could sign. However, he concedes that China won't participate for now." (Jonathan Weisman, "Ex-Clinton Aides Admit Kyoto Treaty Flawed," USA Today, June 12, 2001) (emphasis added)

ú Joseph Aldy, Who Helped Develop The Kyoto Protocol Compliance Cost Estimates, Admits The Clinton Administration Was "Uneasy" About Their Position From The Beginning. "We always thought the (emissions) targets were very ambitious. . . . But the thing that made us really uneasy about our analysis . . . was that if our assumptions didn't come true, you could come out with costs that were much, much higher." (Jonathan Weisman, "Ex-Clinton Aides Admit Kyoto Treaty Flawed," USA Today, June 12, 2001) (emphasis added)

Compliance Costs Would Be Disastrous For American Consumers:

ú President Clinton's Own Department Of Energy Predicted Catastrophic
Gasoline And Electricity Price Increases If America Ratified The Kyoto Protocol. "[T]he [Department of Energy] report estimates that, in 2010: Gasoline prices would likely increase about 66 cents per gallon, from an anticipated baseline price of $1.25 without the Protocol's restrictions to $1.91 a gallon; and electricity would cost 86.4 percent more than it would otherwise." (Alexander F. Annett, "The Department Of Energy's Report On The Impact Of Kyoto," The Heritage Foundation, October 23, 1998; original data from "Impacts Of The Kyoto Protocol On U.S. Energy Markets And Economic Activity," U.S. Department Of Energy, Energy Information Administration, October 1998) (emphasis added)

Among Major Industrialized Countries, Only Romania Has Ratified The Kyoto Protocol:

ú As Of May 9, 2001, Only 34 Countries Have Ratified The Agreement. While China, India, Brazil and other nations have yet to ratify Kyoto, the agreement has been ratified by Mauritius, Lesotho, Tuvalu and the Federal States of Micronesia. (U.N. Framework Convention On Climate Change Website, www.unfccc.int, June 12, 2001)

ú China And India - Two Of The Top Global Emitters Of Greenhouse Gases- Are Exempt From The Provisions Of The Kyoto Treaty. (Bill Sammon, "Bush Hits Others For Global Warming," The Washington Times, June 12, 2001)

ú No European Union Country Has Ratified The Kyoto Agreement. "Ever since President Bush announced that the United States would not support the Kyoto Protocol, European leaders have attacked him relentlessly for this decision, even resorting to petty name-calling. Their protests are hypocritical. Notwithstanding their purported commitment to the Protocol, no EU country has ratified the treaty. Moreover, studies suggest that emissions in Europe will increase over the next 10 years." (Charli E. Coon, "Why President Bush Is Right To Abandon The Kyoto Protocol," The Heritage Foundation, Backgrounder #1437, May 11, 2001) (emphasis added)

A Brookings Institution Expert Denounces The Kyoto Protocol As Implausible:

ú Warwick McKibbin, A Senior Fellow At The Brookings Institution, Says That The Kyoto Protocol Will Never Work. ". . . [T]he mechanisms within the Protocol are too complex and require too many new institutional developments to be plausible. . . . [T]he Kyoto Protocol is never going to work because it is the wrong approach to tackling the climate change issue." (Warwick W. McKibbin, "Moving Beyond Kyoto," The Brookings Institution, October, 2000) (emphasis added)

The Flawed Kyoto Protocol:
Rejected By The Senate 95-0

"Economists from the Clinton White House now concede that complying with Kyoto's mandatory reductions in greenhouse gases would be difficult - and more expensive to American consumers than they thought when they were in charge." (Jonathan Weisman, "Ex-Clinton Aides Admit Kyoto Treaty Flawed," USA Today, June 12, 2001)

The U.S. Senate - Which Must Ratify All Treaties - Unanimously Stated Its Displeasure With The Kyoto Protocol In 1997:

ú In 1997, The U.S. Senate Expressed The Sense Of The Senate, By A 95-0 Vote, That It Would Not Ratify Any Treaty That Would Damage The U.S. Economy Or Unfairly Regulate Developed Countries. (S. Res. 98, Roll Call #205: Resolution Agreed To 95-0: R 54-0; D 41-0, July 25, 1997)

ú Democrat Senator Robert Byrd Said That The Exemption Of Developing Countries Spelled Trouble For America. "If you want to really kill this treaty, abide by the Berlin Mandate and let the developing countries off the
hook until some future time. That is what will surely kill the treaty, and I will join in stabbing it in the heart, if that is the case. If that treaty comes back here and the developing countries are left off the hook, count me in on the assassination of the treaty. It will be done in public view. It won't be behind a bush." (Senator Byrd, Congressional Record, July 25, 1997) (emphasis added)

Former Aides To President Clinton Admitted That The Kyoto Protocol Is Flawed
And That Support For The Treaty Has Stalled Over Time:

ú USA Today Reported That The Clinton Administration's Global Warming
Coordinator Now Admits China - The World's Largest Nation - Will Not Ratify The Kyoto Protocol Any Time Soon. "Todd Stern, Clinton's global warming coordinator, says that the Europeans would likely go along with an unlimited
trading system if the Bush administration would return to the negotiating table to produce a revised treaty it could sign. However, he concedes that China won't participate for now." (Jonathan Weisman, "Ex-Clinton Aides Admit Kyoto Treaty Flawed," USA Today, June 12, 2001) (emphasis added)

ú Joseph Aldy, Who Helped Develop The Kyoto Protocol Compliance Cost Estimates, Admits The Clinton Administration Was "Uneasy" About Their Position From The Beginning. "We always thought the (emissions) targets were very ambitious. . . . But the thing that made us really uneasy about our analysis . . . was that if our assumptions didn't come true, you could come out with costs that were much, much higher." (Jonathan Weisman, "Ex-Clinton Aides Admit Kyoto Treaty Flawed," USA Today, June 12, 2001) (emphasis added)

Compliance Costs Would Be Disastrous For American Consumers:

ú President Clinton's Own Department Of Energy Predicted Catastrophic
Gasoline And Electricity Price Increases If America Ratified The Kyoto Protocol. "[T]he [Department of Energy] report estimates that, in 2010: Gasoline prices would likely increase about 66 cents per gallon, from an anticipated baseline price of $1.25 without the Protocol's restrictions to $1.91 a gallon; and electricity would cost 86.4 percent more than it would otherwise." (Alexander F. Annett, "The Department Of Energy's Report On The Impact Of Kyoto," The Heritage Foundation, October 23, 1998; original data from "Impacts Of The Kyoto Protocol On U.S. Energy Markets And Economic Activity," U.S. Department Of Energy, Energy Information Administration, October 1998) (emphasis added)

Among Major Industrialized Countries, Only Romania Has Ratified The Kyoto Protocol:

ú As Of May 9, 2001, Only 34 Countries Have Ratified The Agreement. While China, India, Brazil and other nations have yet to ratify Kyoto, the agreement has been ratified by Mauritius, Lesotho, Tuvalu and the Federal States of Micronesia. (U.N. Framework Convention On Climate Change Website, www.unfccc.int, June 12, 2001)

ú China And India - Two Of The Top Global Emitters Of Greenhouse Gases- Are Exempt From The Provisions Of The Kyoto Treaty. (Bill Sammon, "Bush Hits Others For Global Warming," The Washington Times, June 12, 2001)

ú No European Union Country Has Ratified The Kyoto Agreement. "Ever since President Bush announced that the United States would not support the Kyoto Protocol, European leaders have attacked him relentlessly for this decision, even resorting to petty name-calling. Their protests are hypocritical. Notwithstanding their purported commitment to the Protocol, no EU country has ratified the treaty. Moreover, studies suggest that emissions in Europe will increase over the next 10 years." (Charli E. Coon, "Why President Bush Is Right To Abandon The Kyoto Protocol," The Heritage Foundation, Backgrounder #1437, May 11, 2001) (emphasis added)

A Brookings Institution Expert Denounces The Kyoto Protocol As Implausible:

ú Warwick McKibbin, A Senior Fellow At The Brookings Institution, Says That The Kyoto Protocol Will Never Work. ". . . [T]he mechanisms within the Protocol are too complex and require too many new institutional developments to be plausible. . . . [T]he Kyoto Protocol is never going to work because it is the wrong approach to tackling the climate change issue." (Warwick W. McKibbin, "Moving Beyond Kyoto," The Brookings Institution, October, 2000) (emphasis added)

The Flawed Kyoto Protocol:
Rejected By The Senate 95-0

"Economists from the Clinton White House now concede that complying with Kyoto's mandatory reductions in greenhouse gases would be difficult - and more expensive to American consumers than they thought when they were in charge." (Jonathan Weisman, "Ex-Clinton Aides Admit Kyoto Treaty Flawed," USA Today, June 12, 2001)

The U.S. Senate - Which Must Ratify All Treaties - Unanimously Stated Its Displeasure With The Kyoto Protocol In 1997:

ú In 1997, The U.S. Senate Expressed The Sense Of The Senate, By A 95-0 Vote, That It Would Not Ratify Any Treaty That Would Damage The U.S. Economy Or Unfairly Regulate Developed Countries. (S. Res. 98, Roll Call #205: Resolution Agreed To 95-0: R 54-0; D 41-0, July 25, 1997)

ú Democrat Senator Robert Byrd Said That The Exemption Of Developing Countries Spelled Trouble For America. "If you want to really kill this treaty, abide by the Berlin Mandate and let the developing countries off the hook until some future time. That is what will surely kill the treaty, and I will join in stabbing it in the heart, if that is the case. If that treaty comes back here and the developing countries are left off the hook, count me in on the assassination of the treaty. It will be done in public view. It won't be behind a bush." (Senator Byrd, Congressional Record, July 25, 1997) (emphasis added)

ú USA Today Reported That The Clinton Administration's Global Warming Coordinator Now Admits China - The World's Largest Nation - Will Not Ratify The Kyoto Protocol Any Time Soon. "Todd Stern, Clinton's global warming coordinator, says that the Europeans would likely go along with an unlimited trading system if the Bush administration would return to the negotiating table to produce a revised treaty it could sign. However, he concedes that China won't participate for now." (Jonathan Weisman, "Ex-Clinton Aides Admit Kyoto Treaty Flawed," USA Today, June 12, 2001) (emphasis added)

ú Joseph Aldy, Who Helped Develop The Kyoto Protocol Compliance Cost Estimates, Admits The Clinton Administration Was "Uneasy" About Their Position From The Beginning. "We always thought the (emissions) targets were very ambitious. . . . But the thing that made us really uneasy about our analysis . . . was that if our assumptions didn't come true, you could come out with costs that were much, much higher." (Jonathan Weisman, "Ex-Clinton Aides Admit Kyoto Treaty Flawed," USA Today, June 12, 2001) (emphasis added)

ú President Clinton's Own Department Of Energy Predicted Catastrophic Gasoline And Electricity Price Increases If America Ratified The Kyoto Protocol. "[T]he [Department of Energy] report estimates that, in 2010: Gasoline prices would likely increase about 66 cents per gallon, from an anticipated baseline price of $1.25 without the Protocol's restrictions to $1.91 a gallon; and electricity would cost 86.4 percent more than it would otherwise." (Alexander F. Annett, "The Department Of Energy's Report On The Impact Of Kyoto," The Heritage Foundation, October 23, 1998; original data from "Impacts Of The Kyoto Protocol On U.S. Energy Markets And Economic Activity," U.S. Department Of Energy, Energy Information Administration, October 1998) (emphasis added)

Among Major Industrialized Countries, Only Romania Has Ratified The Kyoto Protocol:

ú As Of May 9, 2001, Only 34 Countries Have Ratified The Agreement. While China, India, Brazil and other nations have yet to ratify Kyoto, the agreement has been ratified by Mauritius, Lesotho, Tuvalu and the Federal States of Micronesia. (U.N. Framework Convention On Climate Change Website, www.unfccc.int, June 12, 2001)

ú China And India - Two Of The Top Global Emitters Of Greenhouse Gases- Are Exempt From The Provisions Of The Kyoto Treaty. (Bill Sammon, "Bush Hits Others For Global Warming," The Washington Times, June 12, 2001)

ú No European Union Country Has Ratified The Kyoto Agreement. "Ever since President Bush announced that the United States would not support the Kyoto Protocol, European leaders have attacked him relentlessly for this decision, even resorting to petty name-calling. Their protests are hypocritical. Notwithstanding their purported commitment to the Protocol, no EU country has ratified the treaty. Moreover, studies suggest that emissions in Europe will increase over the next 10 years." (Charli E. Coon, "Why President Bush Is Right To Abandon The Kyoto Protocol," The Heritage Foundation, Backgrounder #1437, May 11, 2001) (emphasis added)

A Brookings Institution Expert Denounces The Kyoto Protocol As Implausible:

ú Warwick McKibbin, A Senior Fellow At The Brookings Institution, Says That The Kyoto Protocol Will Never Work. ". . . [T]he mechanisms within the Protocol are too complex and require too many new institutional developments to be plausible. . . . [T]he Kyoto Protocol is never going to work because it is the wrong approach to tackling the climate change issue." (Warwick W. McKibbin, "Moving Beyond Kyoto," The Brookings Institution, October, 2000) (emphasis added)

The Flawed Kyoto Protocol:
Rejected By The Senate 95-0

"Economists from the Clinton White House now concede that complying with Kyoto's mandatory reductions in greenhouse gases would be difficult - and more expensive to American consumers than they thought when they were in charge." (Jonathan Weisman, "Ex-Clinton Aides Admit Kyoto Treaty Flawed," USA Today, June 12, 2001)

The U.S. Senate - Which Must Ratify All Treaties - Unanimously Stated Its Displeasure With The Kyoto Protocol In 1997:

ú In 1997, The U.S. Senate Expressed The Sense Of The Senate, By A 95-0 Vote, That It Would Not Ratify Any Treaty That Would Damage The U.S. Economy Or Unfairly Regulate Developed Countries. (S. Res. 98, Roll Call #205: Resolution Agreed To 95-0: R 54-0; D 41-0, July 25, 1997)

ú Democrat Senator Robert Byrd Said That The Exemption Of Developing Countries Spelled Trouble For America. "If you want to really kill this treaty, abide by the Berlin Mandate and let the developing countries off the
hook until some future time. That is what will surely kill the treaty, and I will join in stabbing it in the heart, if that is the case. If that treaty comes back here and the developing countries are left off the hook, count me in on the assassination of the treaty. It will be done in public view. It won't be behind a bush." (Senator Byrd, Congressional Record, July 25, 1997) (emphasis added)

Former Aides To President Clinton Admitted That The Kyoto Protocol Is Flawed
And That Support For The Treaty Has Stalled Over Time:

ú USA Today Reported That The Clinton Administration's Global Warming
Coordinator Now Admits China - The World's Largest Nation - Will Not Ratify The Kyoto Protocol Any Time Soon. "Todd Stern, Clinton's global warming coordinator, says that the Europeans would likely go along with an unlimited
trading system if the Bush administration would return to the negotiating table to produce a revised treaty it could sign. However, he concedes that China won't participate for now." (Jonathan Weisman, "Ex-Clinton Aides Admit Kyoto Treaty Flawed," USA Today, June 12, 2001) (emphasis added)

ú Joseph Aldy, Who Helped Develop The Kyoto Protocol Compliance Cost Estimates, Admits The Clinton Administration Was "Uneasy" About Their Position From The Beginning. "We always thought the (emissions) targets were very ambitious. . . . But the thing that made us really uneasy about our analysis . . . was that if our assumptions didn't come true, you could come out with costs that were much, much higher." (Jonathan Weisman, "Ex-Clinton Aides Admit Kyoto Treaty Flawed," USA Today, June 12, 2001) (emphasis added)

Compliance Costs Would Be Disastrous For American Consumers:

ú President Clinton's Own Department Of Energy Predicted Catastrophic
Gasoline And Electricity Price Increases If America Ratified The Kyoto Protocol. "[T]he [Department of Energy] report estimates that, in 2010: Gasoline prices would likely increase about 66 cents per gallon, from an anticipated baseline price of $1.25 without the Protocol's restrictions to $1.91 a gallon; and electricity would cost 86.4 percent more than it would otherwise." (Alexander F. Annett, "The Department Of Energy's Report On The Impact Of Kyoto," The Heritage Foundation, October 23, 1998; original data from "Impacts Of The Kyoto Protocol On U.S. Energy Markets And Economic Activity," U.S. Department Of Energy, Energy Information Administration, October 1998) (emphasis added)

Among Major Industrialized Countries, Only Romania Has Ratified The Kyoto Protocol:

ú As Of May 9, 2001, Only 34 Countries Have Ratified The Agreement. While China, India, Brazil and other nations have yet to ratify Kyoto, the agreement has been ratified by Mauritius, Lesotho, Tuvalu and the Federal States of Micronesia. (U.N. Framework Convention On Climate Change Website, www.unfccc.int, June 12, 2001)

ú China And India - Two Of The Top Global Emitters Of Greenhouse Gases- Are Exempt From The Provisions Of The Kyoto Treaty. (Bill Sammon, "Bush Hits Others For Global Warming," The Washington Times, June 12, 2001)

ú No European Union Country Has Ratified The Kyoto Agreement. "Ever since President Bush announced that the United States would not support the Kyoto Protocol, European leaders have attacked him relentlessly for this decision, even resorting to petty name-calling. Their protests are hypocritical. Notwithstanding their purported commitment to the Protocol, no EU country has ratified the treaty. Moreover, studies suggest that emissions in Europe will increase over the next 10 years." (Charli E. Coon, "Why President Bush Is Right To Abandon The Kyoto Protocol," The Heritage Foundation, Backgrounder #1437, May 11, 2001) (emphasis added)

A Brookings Institution Expert Denounces The Kyoto Protocol As Implausible:

ú Warwick McKibbin, A Senior Fellow At The Brookings Institution, Says That The Kyoto Protocol Will Never Work. ". . . [T]he mechanisms within the Protocol are too complex and require too many new institutional developments to be plausible. . . . [T]he Kyoto Protocol is never going to work because it is the wrong approach to tackling the climate change issue." (Warwick W. McKibbin, "Moving Beyond Kyoto," The Brookings Institution, October, 2000) (emphasis added)

The Flawed Kyoto Protocol:
Rejected By The Senate 95-0

"Economists from the Clinton White House now concede that complying with Kyoto's mandatory reductions in greenhouse gases would be difficult - and more expensive to American consumers than they thought when they were in charge." (Jonathan Weisman, "Ex-Clinton Aides Admit Kyoto Treaty Flawed," USA Today, June 12, 2001)

The U.S. Senate - Which Must Ratify All Treaties - Unanimously Stated Its Displeasure With The Kyoto Protocol In 1997:

ú In 1997, The U.S. Senate Expressed The Sense Of The Senate, By A 95-0 Vote, That It Would Not Ratify Any Treaty That Would Damage The U.S. Economy Or Unfairly Regulate Developed Countries. (S. Res. 98, Roll Call #205: Resolution Agreed To 95-0: R 54-0; D 41-0, July 25, 1997)

ú Democrat Senator Robert Byrd Said That The Exemption Of Developing Countries Spelled Trouble For America. "If you want to really kill this treaty, abide by the Berlin Mandate and let the developing countries off the
hook until some future time. That is what will surely kill the treaty, and I will join in stabbing it in the heart, if that is the case. If that treaty comes back here and the developing countries are left off the hook, count me in on the assassination of the treaty. It will be done in public view. It won't be behind a bush." (Senator Byrd, Congressional Record, July 25, 1997) (emphasis added)

Former Aides To President Clinton Admitted That The Kyoto Protocol Is Flawed
And That Support For The Treaty Has Stalled Over Time:

ú USA Today Reported That The Clinton Administration's Global Warming
Coordinator Now Admits China - The World's Largest Nation - Will Not Ratify The Kyoto Protocol Any Time Soon. "Todd Stern, Clinton's global warming coordinator, says that the Europeans would likely go along with an unlimited
trading system if the Bush administration would return to the negotiating table to produce a revised treaty it could sign. However, he concedes that China won't participate for now." (Jonathan Weisman, "Ex-Clinton Aides Admit Kyoto Treaty Flawed," USA Today, June 12, 2001) (emphasis added)

ú Joseph Aldy, Who Helped Develop The Kyoto Protocol Compliance Cost Estimates, Admits The Clinton Administration Was "Uneasy" About Their Position From The Beginning. "We always thought the (emissions) targets were very ambitious. . . . But the thing that made us really uneasy about our analysis . . . was that if our assumptions didn't come true, you could come out with costs that were much, much higher." (Jonathan Weisman, "Ex-Clinton Aides Admit Kyoto Treaty Flawed," USA Today, June 12, 2001) (emphasis added)

Compliance Costs Would Be Disastrous For American Consumers:

ú President Clinton's Own Department Of Energy Predicted Catastrophic
Gasoline And Electricity Price Increases If America Ratified The Kyoto Protocol. "[T]he [Department of Energy] report estimates that, in 2010: Gasoline prices would likely increase about 66 cents per gallon, from an anticipated baseline price of $1.25 without the Protocol's restrictions to $1.91 a gallon; and electricity would cost 86.4 percent more than it would otherwise." (Alexander F. Annett, "The Department Of Energy's Report On The Impact Of Kyoto," The Heritage Foundation, October 23, 1998; original data from "Impacts Of The Kyoto Protocol On U.S. Energy Markets And Economic Activity," U.S. Department Of Energy, Energy Information Administration, October 1998) (emphasis added)

Among Major Industrialized Countries, Only Romania Has Ratified The Kyoto Protocol:

ú As Of May 9, 2001, Only 34 Countries Have Ratified The Agreement. While China, India, Brazil and other nations have yet to ratify Kyoto, the agreement has been ratified by Mauritius, Lesotho, Tuvalu and the Federal States of Micronesia. (U.N. Framework Convention On Climate Change Website, www.unfccc.int, June 12, 2001)

ú China And India - Two Of The Top Global Emitters Of Greenhouse Gases- Are Exempt From The Provisions Of The Kyoto Treaty. (Bill Sammon, "Bush Hits Others For Global Warming," The Washington Times, June 12, 2001)

ú No European Union Country Has Ratified The Kyoto Agreement. "Ever since President Bush announced that the United States would not support the Kyoto Protocol, European leaders have attacked him relentlessly for this decision, even resorting to petty name-calling. Their protests are hypocritical. Notwithstanding their purported commitment to the Protocol, no EU country has ratified the treaty. Moreover, studies suggest that emissions in Europe will increase over the next 10 years." (Charli E. Coon, "Why President Bush Is Right To Abandon The Kyoto Protocol," The Heritage Foundation, Backgrounder #1437, May 11, 2001) (emphasis added)

A Brookings Institution Expert Denounces The Kyoto Protocol As Implausible:

ú Warwick McKibbin, A Senior Fellow At The Brookings Institution, Says That The Kyoto Protocol Will Never Work. ". . . [T]he mechanisms within the Protocol are too complex and require too many new institutional developments to be plausible. . . . [T]he Kyoto Protocol is never going to work because it is the wrong approach to tackling the climate change issue." (Warwick W. McKibbin, "Moving Beyond Kyoto," The Brookings Institution, October, 2000) (emphasis added)

The Flawed Kyoto Protocol:
Rejected By The Senate 95-0

"Economists from the Clinton White House now concede that complying with Kyoto's mandatory reductions in greenhouse gases would be difficult - and more expensive to American consumers than they thought when they were in charge." (Jonathan Weisman, "Ex-Clinton Aides Admit Kyoto Treaty Flawed," USA Today, June 12, 2001)

The U.S. Senate - Which Must Ratify All Treaties - Unanimously Stated Its Displeasure With The Kyoto Protocol In 1997:

ú In 1997, The U.S. Senate Expressed The Sense Of The Senate, By A 95-0 Vote, That It Would Not Ratify Any Treaty That Would Damage The U.S. Economy Or Unfairly Regulate Developed Countries. (S. Res. 98, Roll Call #205: Resolution Agreed To 95-0: R 54-0; D 41-0, July 25, 1997)

ú Democrat Senator Robert Byrd Said That The Exemption Of Developing Countries Spelled Trouble For America. "If you want to really kill this treaty, abide by the Berlin Mandate and let the developing countries off the
hook until some future time. That is what will surely kill the treaty, and I will join in stabbing it in the heart, if that is the case. If that treaty comes back here and the developing countries are left off the hook, count me in on the assassination of the treaty. It will be done in public view. It won't be behind a bush." (Senator Byrd, Congressional Record, July 25, 1997) (emphasis added)

Former Aides To President Clinton Admitted That The Kyoto Protocol Is Flawed
And That Support For The Treaty Has Stalled Over Time:

ú USA Today Reported That The Clinton Administration's Global Warming
Coordinator Now Admits China - The World's Largest Nation - Will Not Ratify The Kyoto Protocol Any Time Soon. "Todd Stern, Clinton's global warming coordinator, says that the Europeans would likely go along with an unlimited
trading system if the Bush administration would return to the negotiating table to produce a revised treaty it could sign. However, he concedes that China won't participate for now." (Jonathan Weisman, "Ex-Clinton Aides Admit Kyoto Treaty Flawed," USA Today, June 12, 2001) (emphasis added)

ú Joseph Aldy, Who Helped Develop The Kyoto Protocol Compliance Cost Estimates, Admits The Clinton Administration Was "Uneasy" About Their Position From The Beginning. "We always thought the (emissions) targets were very ambitious. . . . But the thing that made us really uneasy about our analysis . . . was that if our assumptions didn't come true, you could come out with costs that were much, much higher." (Jonathan Weisman, "Ex-Clinton Aides Admit Kyoto Treaty Flawed," USA Today, June 12, 2001) (emphasis added)

ú President Clinton's Own Department Of Energy Predicted Catastrophic
Gasoline And Electricity Price Increases If America Ratified The Kyoto Protocol. "[T]he [Department of Energy] report estimates that, in 2010: Gasoline prices would likely increase about 66 cents per gallon, from an anticipated baseline price of $1.25 without the Protocol's restrictions to $1.91 a gallon; and electricity would cost 86.4 percent more than it would otherwise." (Alexander F. Annett, "The Department Of Energy's Report On The Impact Of Kyoto," The Heritage Foundation, October 23, 1998; original data from "Impacts Of The Kyoto Protocol On U.S. Energy Markets And Economic Activity," U.S. Department Of Energy, Energy Information Administration, October 1998) (emphasis added)

Among Major Industrialized Countries, Only Romania Has Ratified The Kyoto Protocol:

ú As Of May 9, 2001, Only 34 Countries Have Ratified The Agreement. While China, India, Brazil and other nations have yet to ratify Kyoto, the agreement has been ratified by Mauritius, Lesotho, Tuvalu and the Federal States of Micronesia. (U.N. Framework Convention On Climate Change Website, www.unfccc.int, June 12, 2001)

ú China And India - Two Of The Top Global Emitters Of Greenhouse Gases- Are Exempt From The Provisions Of The Kyoto Treaty. (Bill Sammon, "Bush Hits Others For Global Warming," The Washington Times, June 12, 2001)

ú No European Union Country Has Ratified The Kyoto Agreement. "Ever since President Bush announced that the United States would not support the Kyoto Protocol, European leaders have attacked him relentlessly for this decision, even resorting to petty name-calling. Their protests are hypocritical. Notwithstanding their purported commitment to the Protocol, no EU country has ratified the treaty. Moreover, studies suggest that emissions in Europe will increase over the next 10 years." (Charli E. Coon, "Why President Bush Is Right To Abandon The Kyoto Protocol," The Heritage Foundation, Backgrounder #1437, May 11, 2001) (emphasis added)

ú Warwick McKibbin, A Senior Fellow At The Brookings Institution, Says That The Kyoto Protocol Will Never Work. ". . . [T]he mechanisms within the Protocol are too complex and require too many new institutional developments to be plausible. . . . [T]he Kyoto Protocol is never going to work because it is the wrong approach to tackling the climate change issue." (Warwick W. McKibbin, "Moving Beyond Kyoto," The Brookings Institution, October, 2000) (emphasis added)

- President Clinton's Own Department Of Energy Predicted Catastrophic Gasoline And Electricity Price Increases If America Ratified The Kyoto Protocol. "[T]he [Department of Energy] report estimates that, in 2010: Gasoline prices would likely increase about 66 cents per gallon, from an anticipated baseline price of $1.25 without the Protocol's restrictions to $1.91 a gallon; and electricity would cost 86.4 percent more than it would otherwise." (Alexander F. Annett, "The Department Of Energy's Report On The Impact Of Kyoto," The Heritage Foundation, October 23, 1998; original data from "Impacts Of The Kyoto Protocol On U.S. Energy Markets And Economic Activity," U.S. Department Of Energy, Energy Information Administration, October 1998) (emphasis added)

Among Major Industrialized Countries, Only Romania Has Ratified The Kyoto Protocol:

- As Of May 9, 2001, Only 34 Countries Have Ratified The Agreement. While China, India, Brazil and other nations have yet to ratify Kyoto, the agreement has been ratified by Mauritius, Lesotho, Tuvalu and the Federal States of Micronesia. (U.N. Framework Convention On Climate Change Website, www.unfccc.int, June 12, 2001)

- China And India – Two Of The Top Global Emitters Of Greenhouse Gases – Are Exempt From The Provisions Of The Kyoto Treaty. (Bill Sammon, "Bush Hits Others For Global Warming," The Washington Times, June 12, 2001)

- No European Union Country Has Ratified The Kyoto Agreement. "Ever since President Bush announced that the United States would not support the Kyoto Protocol, European leaders have attacked him relentlessly for this decision, even resorting to petty name-calling. Their protests are hypocritical. Notwithstanding their purported commitment to the Protocol, no EU country has ratified the treaty. Moreover, studies suggest that emissions in Europe will increase over the next 10 years." (Charli E. Coon, "Why President Bush Is Right To Abandon The Kyoto Protocol," The Heritage Foundation, Backgrounder #1437, May 11, 2001) (emphasis added)

A Brookings Institution Expert Denounces The Kyoto Protocol As Implausible:

- Warwick McKibbin, A Senior Fellow At The Brookings Institution, Says That The Kyoto Protocol Will Never Work. ". . . [T]he mechanisms within the Protocol are too complex and require too many new institutional developments to be plausible. . . . [T]he Kyoto Protocol is never going to work because it is the wrong approach to tackling the climate change issue." (Warwick W. McKibbin, "Moving Beyond Kyoto," The Brookings Institution, October, 2000) (emphasis added)

The Flawed Kyoto Protocol:
Rejected By The Senate 95-0

"Economists from the Clinton White House now concede that complying with Kyoto's mandatory reductions in greenhouse gases would be difficult - and more expensive to American consumers than they thought when they were in charge." (Jonathan Weisman, "Ex-Clinton Aides Admit Kyoto Treaty Flawed," USA Today, June 12, 2001)

The U.S. Senate - Which Must Ratify All Treaties - Unanimously Stated Its Displeasure With The Kyoto Protocol In 1997:

ú In 1997, The U.S. Senate Expressed The Sense Of The Senate, By A 95-0 Vote, That It Would Not Ratify Any Treaty That Would Damage The U.S. Economy Or Unfairly Regulate Developed Countries. (S. Res. 98, Roll Call #205: Resolution Agreed To 95-0: R 54-0; D 41-0, July 25, 1997)

ú Democrat Senator Robert Byrd Said That The Exemption Of Developing Countries Spelled Trouble For America. "If you want to really kill this treaty, abide by the Berlin Mandate and let the developing countries off the
hook until some future time. That is what will surely kill the treaty, and I will join in stabbing it in the heart, if that is the case. If that treaty comes back here and the developing countries are left off the hook, count me in on the assassination of the treaty. It will be done in public view. It won't be behind a bush." (Senator Byrd, Congressional Record, July 25, 1997) (emphasis added)

Former Aides To President Clinton Admitted That The Kyoto Protocol Is Flawed
And That Support For The Treaty Has Stalled Over Time:

ú USA Today Reported That The Clinton Administration's Global Warming
Coordinator Now Admits China - The World's Largest Nation - Will Not Ratify The Kyoto Protocol Any Time Soon. "Todd Stern, Clinton's global warming coordinator, says that the Europeans would likely go along with an unlimited
trading system if the Bush administration would return to the negotiating table to produce a revised treaty it could sign. However, he concedes that China won't participate for now." (Jonathan Weisman, "Ex-Clinton Aides Admit Kyoto Treaty Flawed," USA Today, June 12, 2001) (emphasis added)

ú Joseph Aldy, Who Helped Develop The Kyoto Protocol Compliance Cost Estimates, Admits The Clinton Administration Was "Uneasy" About Their Position From The Beginning. "We always thought the (emissions) targets were very ambitious. . . . But the thing that made us really uneasy about our analysis . . . was that if our assumptions didn't come true, you could come out with costs that were much, much higher." (Jonathan Weisman, "Ex-Clinton Aides Admit Kyoto Treaty Flawed," USA Today, June 12, 2001) (emphasis added)

Compliance Costs Would Be Disastrous For American Consumers:

ú President Clinton's Own Department Of Energy Predicted Catastrophic
Gasoline And Electricity Price Increases If America Ratified The Kyoto Protocol. "[T]he [Department of Energy] report estimates that, in 2010: Gasoline prices would likely increase about 66 cents per gallon, from an anticipated baseline price of $1.25 without the Protocol's restrictions to $1.91 a gallon; and electricity would cost 86.4 percent more than it would otherwise." (Alexander F. Annett, "The Department Of Energy's Report On The Impact Of Kyoto," The Heritage Foundation, October 23, 1998; original data from "Impacts Of The Kyoto Protocol On U.S. Energy Markets And Economic Activity," U.S. Department Of Energy, Energy Information Administration, October 1998) (emphasis added)

Among Major Industrialized Countries, Only Romania Has Ratified The Kyoto Protocol:

ú As Of May 9, 2001, Only 34 Countries Have Ratified The Agreement. While China, India, Brazil and other nations have yet to ratify Kyoto, the agreement has been ratified by Mauritius, Lesotho, Tuvalu and the Federal States of Micronesia. (U.N. Framework Convention On Climate Change Website, www.unfccc.int, June 12, 2001)

ú China And India - Two Of The Top Global Emitters Of Greenhouse Gases- Are Exempt From The Provisions Of The Kyoto Treaty. (Bill Sammon, "Bush Hits Others For Global Warming," The Washington Times, June 12, 2001)

ú No European Union Country Has Ratified The Kyoto Agreement. "Ever since President Bush announced that the United States would not support the Kyoto Protocol, European leaders have attacked him relentlessly for this decision, even resorting to petty name-calling. Their protests are hypocritical. Notwithstanding their purported commitment to the Protocol, no EU country has ratified the treaty. Moreover, studies suggest that emissions in Europe will increase over the next 10 years." (Charli E. Coon, "Why President Bush Is Right To Abandon The Kyoto Protocol," The Heritage Foundation, Backgrounder #1437, May 11, 2001) (emphasis added)

A Brookings Institution Expert Denounces The Kyoto Protocol As Implausible:

ú Warwick McKibbin, A Senior Fellow At The Brookings Institution, Says That The Kyoto Protocol Will Never Work. ". . . RNC RESEARCH BRIEFING

RNCResearch@rnchq.org

June 13, 2001

Rejected By The Senate 95-0

"Economists from the Clinton White House now concede that complying with Kyoto's mandatory reductions in greenhouse gases would be difficult – and more expensive to American consumers than they thought when they were in charge." (Jonathan Weisman, "Ex-Clinton Aides Admit Kyoto Treaty Flawed," USA Today, June 12, 2001)

The U.S. Senate – Which Must Ratify All Treaties – Unanimously Stated Its Displeasure With The Kyoto Protocol In 1997:

- In 1997, The U.S. Senate Expressed The Sense Of The Senate, By A 95-0 Vote, That It Would Not Ratify Any Treaty That Would Damage The U.S. Economy Or Unfairly Regulate Developed Countries. (S. Res. 98, Roll Call #205: Resolution Agreed To 95-0: R 54-0; D 41-0, July 25, 1997)

- Democrat Senator Robert Byrd Said That The Exemption Of Developing Countries Spelled Trouble For America. "If you want to really kill this treaty, abide by the Berlin Mandate and let the developing countries off the hook until some future time. That is what will surely kill the treaty, and I will join in stabbing it in the heart, if that is the case. If that treaty comes back here and the developing countries are left off the hook, count me in on the assassination of the treaty. It will be done in public view. It won't be behind a bush." (Senator Byrd, Congressional Record, July 25, 1997) (emphasis added)

Former Aides To President Clinton Admitted That The Kyoto Protocol Is Flawed And That Support For The Treaty Has Stalled Over Time:

- USA Today* Reported That The Clinton Administration's Global Warming Coordinator Now Admits China – The World's Largest Nation – Will Not Ratify The Kyoto Protocol Any Time Soon. "Todd Stern, Clinton's global warming coordinator, says that the Europeans would likely go along with an unlimited trading system if the Bush administration would return to the negotiating table to produce a revised treaty it could sign. However, he concedes that China won't participate for now." (Jonathan Weisman, "Ex-Clinton Aides Admit Kyoto Treaty Flawed," USA Today, June 12, 2001) (emphasis added)

- Joseph Aldy, Who Helped Develop The Kyoto Protocol Compliance Cost Estimates, Admits The Clinton Administration Was "Uneasy" About Their Position From The

Beginning. "We always thought the (emissions) targets were very ambitious. . . . But the thing that made us really uneasy about our analysis . . . was that if our assumptions didn't come true, you could come out with costs that were much, much higher." (Jonathan Weisman, "Ex-Clinton Aides Admit Kyoto Treaty Flawed," USA Today, June 12, 2001) (emphasis added)

Compliance Costs Would Be Disastrous For American Consumers:

- President Clinton's Own Department Of Energy Predicted Catastrophic Gasoline And Electricity Price Increases If America Ratified The Kyoto Protocol. "[T]he [Department of Energy] report estimates that, in 2010: Gasoline prices would likely increase about 66 cents per gallon, from an anticipated baseline price of $1.25 without the Protocol's restrictions to $1.91 a gallon; and electricity would cost 86.4 percent more than it would otherwise." (Alexander F. Annett, "The Department Of Energy's Report On The Impact Of Kyoto," The Heritage Foundation, October 23, 1998; original data from "Impacts Of The Kyoto Protocol On U.S. Energy Markets And Economic Activity," U.S. Department Of Energy, Energy Information Administration, October 1998) (emphasis added)

Among Major Industrialized Countries, Only Romania Has Ratified The Kyoto Protocol:

- As Of May 9, 2001, Only 34 Countries Have Ratified The Agreement. While China, India, Brazil and other nations have yet to ratify Kyoto, the agreement has been ratified by Mauritius, Lesotho, Tuvalu and the Federal States of Micronesia. (U.N. Framework Convention On Climate Change Website, www.unfccc.int, June 12, 2001)

- China And India – Two Of The Top Global Emitters Of Greenhouse Gases – Are Exempt From The Provisions Of The Kyoto Treaty. (Bill Sammon, "Bush Hits Others For Global Warming," The Washington Times, June 12, 2001)

- No European Union Country Has Ratified The Kyoto Agreement. "Ever since President Bush announced that the United States would not support the Kyoto Protocol, European leaders have attacked him relentlessly for this decision, even resorting to petty name-calling. Their protests are hypocritical. Notwithstanding their purported commitment to the Protocol, no EU country has ratified the treaty. Moreover, studies suggest that emissions in Europe will increase over the next 10 years." (Charli E. Coon, "Why President Bush Is Right To Abandon The Kyoto Protocol," The Heritage Foundation, Backgrounder #1437, May 11, 2001) (emphasis added)

A Brookings Institution Expert Denounces The Kyoto Protocol As Implausible:

- Warwick McKibbin, A Senior Fellow At The Brookings Institution, Says That The Kyoto Protocol Will Never Work. ". . . [T]he mechanisms within the Protocol are too complex and require too many new institutional developments to be plausible. . . . [T]he Kyoto Protocol is never going to work because it is the wrong approach to tackling the climate change issue." (Warwick W. McKibbin, "Moving Beyond Kyoto," The Brookings Institution, October, 2000) (emphasis added)

The Flawed Kyoto Protocol:
Rejected By The Senate 95-0

"Economists from the Clinton White House now concede that complying with Kyoto's mandatory reductions in greenhouse gases would be difficult - and more expensive to American consumers than they thought when they were in charge." (Jonathan Weisman, "Ex-Clinton Aides Admit Kyoto Treaty Flawed," USA Today, June 12, 2001)

The U.S. Senate - Which Must Ratify All Treaties - Unanimously Stated Its Displeasure With The Kyoto Protocol In 1997:

ú In 1997, The U.S. Senate Expressed The Sense Of The Senate, By A 95-0 Vote, That It Would Not Ratify Any Treaty That Would Damage The U.S. Economy Or Unfairly Regulate Developed Countries. (S. Res. 98, Roll Call #205: Resolution Agreed To 95-0: R 54-0; D 41-0, July 25, 1997)

ú Democrat Senator Robert Byrd Said That The Exemption Of Developing Countries Spelled Trouble For America. "If you want to really kill this treaty, abide by the Berlin Mandate and let the developing countries off the
hook until some future time. That is what will surely kill the treaty, and I will join in stabbing it in the heart, if that is the case. If that treaty comes back here and the developing countries are left off the hook, count me in on the assassination of the treaty. It will be done in public view. It won't be behind a bush." (Senator Byrd, Congressional Record, July 25, 1997) (emphasis added)

Former Aides To President Clinton Admitted That The Kyoto Protocol Is Flawed
And That Support For The Treaty Has Stalled Over Time:

ú USA Today Reported That The Clinton Administration's Global Warming
Coordinator Now Admits China - The World's Largest Nation - Will Not Ratify The Kyoto Protocol Any Time Soon. "Todd Stern, Clinton's global warming coordinator, says that the Europeans would likely go along with an unlimited
trading system if the Bush administration would return to the negotiating table to produce a revised treaty it could sign. However, he concedes that China won't participate for now." (Jonathan Weisman, "Ex-Clinton Aides Admit Kyoto Treaty Flawed," USA Today, June 12, 2001) (emphasis added)

ú Joseph Aldy, Who Helped Develop The Kyoto Protocol Compliance Cost Estimates, Admits The Clinton Administration Was "Uneasy" About Their Position From The Beginning. "We always thought the (emissions) targets were very ambitious. . . . But the thing that made us really uneasy about our analysis . . . was that if our assumptions didn't come true, you could come out with costs that were much, much higher." (Jonathan Weisman, "Ex-Clinton Aides Admit Kyoto Treaty Flawed," USA Today, June 12, 2001) (emphasis added)

Compliance Costs Would Be Disastrous For American Consumers:

ú President Clinton's Own Department Of Energy Predicted Catastrophic
Gasoline And Electricity Price Increases If America Ratified The Kyoto Protocol. "[T]he [Department of Energy] report estimates that, in 2010: Gasoline prices would likely increase about 66 cents per gallon, from an anticipated baseline price of $1.25 without the Protocol's restrictions to $1.91 a gallon; and electricity would cost 86.4 percent more than it would otherwise." (Alexander F. Annett, "The Department Of Energy's Report On The Impact Of Kyoto," The Heritage Foundation, October 23, 1998; original data from "Impacts Of The Kyoto Protocol On U.S. Energy Markets And Economic Activity," U.S. Department Of Energy, Energy Information Administration, October 1998) (emphasis added)

Among Major Industrialized Countries, Only Romania Has Ratified The Kyoto Protocol:

ú As Of May 9, 2001, Only 34 Countries Have Ratified The Agreement. While China, India, Brazil and other nations have yet to ratify Kyoto, the agreement has been ratified by Mauritius, Lesotho, Tuvalu and the Federal States of Micronesia. (U.N. Framework Convention On Climate Change Website, www.unfccc.int, June 12, 2001)

ú China And India - Two Of The Top Global Emitters Of Greenhouse Gases- Are Exempt From The Provisions Of The Kyoto Treaty. (Bill Sammon, "Bush Hits Others For Global Warming," The Washington Times, June 12, 2001)

ú No European Union Country Has Ratified The Kyoto Agreement. "Ever since President Bush announced that the United States would not support the Kyoto Protocol, European leaders have attacked him relentlessly for this decision, even resorting to petty name-calling. Their protests are hypocritical. Notwithstanding their purported commitment to the Protocol, no EU country has ratified the treaty. Moreover, studies suggest that emissions in Europe will increase over the next 10 years." (Charli E. Coon, "Why President Bush Is Right To Abandon The Kyoto Protocol," The Heritage Foundation, Backgrounder #1437, May 11, 2001) (emphasis added)

A Brookings Institution Expert Denounces The Kyoto Protocol As Implausible:

ú Warwick McKibbin, A Senior Fellow At The Brookings Institution, Says That The Kyoto Protocol Will Never Work. ". . . [T]he mechanisms within the Protocol are too complex and require too many new institutional developments to be plausible. . . . [T]he Kyoto Protocol is never going to work because it is the wrong approach to tackling the climate change issue." (Warwick W. McKibbin, "Moving Beyond Kyoto," The Brookings Institution, October, 2000) (emphasis added)

The Flawed Kyoto Protocol:
Rejected By The Senate 95-0

The Flawed Kyoto Protocol:
Rejected By The Senate 95-0

"Economists from the Clinton White House now concede that complying with Kyoto's mandatory reductions in greenhouse gases would be difficult - and more expensive to American consumers than they thought when they were in charge." (Jonathan Weisman, "Ex-Clinton Aides Admit Kyoto Treaty Flawed," USA Today, June 12, 2001)

The U.S. Senate - Which Must Ratify All Treaties - Unanimously Stated Its Displeasure With The Kyoto Protocol In 1997:

ú In 1997, The U.S. Senate Expressed The Sense Of The Senate, By A 95-0 Vote, That It Would Not Ratify Any Treaty That Would Damage The U.S. Economy Or Unfairly Regulate Developed Countries. (S. Res. 98, Roll Call #205: Resolution Agreed To 95-0: R 54-0; D 41-0, July 25, 1997)

ú Democrat Senator Robert Byrd Said That The Exemption Of Developing Countries Spelled Trouble For America. "If you want to really kill this treaty, abide by the Berlin Mandate and let the developing countries off the
hook until some future time. That is what will surely kill the treaty, and I will join in stabbing it in the heart, if that is the case. If that treaty comes back here and the developing countries are left off the hook, count me in on the assassination of the treaty. It will be done in public view. It won't be behind a bush." (Senator Byrd, Congressional Record, July 25, 1997) (emphasis added)

Former Aides To President Clinton Admitted That The Kyoto Protocol Is Flawed
And That Support For The Treaty Has Stalled Over Time:

ú USA Today Reported That The Clinton Administration's Global Warming
Coordinator Now Admits China - The World's Largest Nation - Will Not Ratify The Kyoto Protocol Any Time Soon. "Todd Stern, Clinton's global warming coordinator, says that the Europeans would likely go along with an unlimited
trading system if the Bush administration would return to the negotiating table to produce a revised treaty it could sign. However, he concedes that China won't participate for now." (Jonathan Weisman, "Ex-Clinton Aides Admit Kyoto Treaty Flawed," USA Today, June 12, 2001) (emphasis added)

ú Joseph Aldy, Who Helped Develop The Kyoto Protocol Compliance Cost Estimates, Admits The Clinton Administration Was "Uneasy" About Their Position From The Beginning. "We always thought the (emissions) targets were very ambitious. . . . But the thing that made us really uneasy about our analysis . . . was that if our assumptions didn't come true, you could come out with costs that were much, much higher." (Jonathan Weisman, "Ex-Clinton Aides Admit Kyoto Treaty Flawed," USA Today, June 12, 2001) (emphasis added)

Compliance Costs Would Be Disastrous For American Consumers:

ú President Clinton's Own Department Of Energy Predicted Catastrophic
Gasoline And Electricity Price Increases If America Ratified The Kyoto Protocol. "[T]he [Department of Energy] report estimates that, in 2010: Gasoline prices would likely increase about 66 cents per gallon, from an anticipated baseline price of $1.25 without the Protocol's restrictions to $1.91 a gallon; and electricity would cost 86.4 percent more than it would otherwise." (Alexander F. Annett, "The Department Of Energy's Report On The Impact Of Kyoto," The Heritage Foundation, October 23, 1998; original data from "Impacts Of The Kyoto Protocol On U.S. Energy Markets And Economic Activity," U.S. Department Of Energy, Energy Information Administration, October 1998) (emphasis added)

Among Major Industrialized Countries, Only Romania Has Ratified The Kyoto Protocol:

ú As Of May 9, 2001, Only 34 Countries Have Ratified The Agreement. While China, India, Brazil and other nations have yet to ratify Kyoto, the agreement has been ratified by Mauritius, Lesotho, Tuvalu and the Federal States of Micronesia. (U.N. Framework Convention On Climate Change Website, www.unfccc.int, June 12, 2001)

ú China And India - Two Of The Top Global Emitters Of Greenhouse Gases- Are Exempt From The Provisions Of The Kyoto Treaty. (Bill Sammon, "Bush Hits Others For Global Warming," The Washington Times, June 12, 2001)

ú No European Union Country Has Ratified The Kyoto Agreement. "Ever since President Bush announced that the United States would not support the Kyoto Protocol, European leaders have attacked him relentlessly for this decision, even resorting to petty name-calling. Their protests are hypocritical. Notwithstanding their purported commitment to the Protocol, no EU country has ratified the treaty. Moreover, studies suggest that emissions in Europe will increase over the next 10 years." (Charli E. Coon, "Why President Bush Is Right To Abandon The Kyoto Protocol," The Heritage Foundation, Backgrounder #1437, May 11, 2001) (emphasis added)

A Brookings Institution Expert Denounces The Kyoto Protocol As Implausible:

ú Warwick McKibbin, A Senior Fellow At The Brookings Institution, Says That The Kyoto Protocol Will Never Work. ". . . [T]he mechanisms within the Protocol are too complex and require too many new institutional developments to be plausible. . . . [T]he Kyoto Protocol is never going to work because it is the wrong approach to tackling the climate change issue." (Warwick W. McKibbin, "Moving Beyond Kyoto," The Brookings Institution, October, 2000) (emphasis added)

The Flawed Kyoto Protocol:
Rejected By The Senate 95-0

"Economists from the Clinton White House now concede that complying with Kyoto's mandatory reductions in greenhouse gases would be difficult - and more expensive to American consumers than they thought when they were in charge." (Jonathan Weisman, "Ex-Clinton Aides Admit Kyoto Treaty Flawed," USA Today, June 12, 2001)

The U.S. Senate - Which Must Ratify All Treaties - Unanimously Stated Its Displeasure With The Kyoto Protocol In 1997:

ú In 1997, The U.S. Senate Expressed The Sense Of The Senate, By A 95-0 Vote, That It Would Not Ratify Any Treaty That Would Damage The U.S. Economy Or Unfairly Regulate Developed Countries. (S. Res. 98, Roll Call #205: Resolution Agreed To 95-0: R 54-0; D 41-0, July 25, 1997)

ú Democrat Senator Robert Byrd Said That The Exemption Of Developing Countries Spelled Trouble For America. "If you want to really kill this treaty, abide by the Berlin Mandate and let the developing countries off the
hook until some future time. That is what will surely kill the treaty, and I will join in stabbing it in the heart, if that is the case. If that treaty comes back here and the developing countries are left off the hook, count me in on the assassination of the treaty. It will be done in public view. It won't be behind a bush." (Senator Byrd, Congressional Record, July 25, 1997) (emphasis added)

Former Aides To President Clinton Admitted That The Kyoto Protocol Is Flawed
And That Support For The Treaty Has Stalled Over Time:

ú USA Today Reported That The Clinton Administration's Global Warming
Coordinator Now Admits China - The World's Largest Nation - Will Not Ratify The Kyoto Protocol Any Time Soon. "Todd Stern, Clinton's global warming coordinator, says that the Europeans would likely go along with an unlimited
trading system if the Bush administration would return to the negotiating table to produce a revised treaty it could sign. However, he concedes that China won't participate for now." (Jonathan Weisman, "Ex-Clinton Aides Admit Kyoto Treaty Flawed," USA Today, June 12, 2001) (emphasis added)

ú Joseph Aldy, Who Helped Develop The Kyoto Protocol Compliance Cost Estimates, Admits The Clinton Administration Was "Uneasy" About Their Position From The Beginning. "We always thought the (emissions) targets were very ambitious. . . . But the thing that made us really uneasy about our analysis . . . was that if our assumptions didn't come true, you could come out with costs that were much, much higher." (Jonathan Weisman, "Ex-Clinton Aides Admit Kyoto Treaty Flawed," USA Today, June 12, 2001) (emphasis added)

Compliance Costs Would Be Disastrous For American Consumers:

ú President Clinton's Own Department Of Energy Predicted Catastrophic
Gasoline And Electricity Price Increases If America Ratified The Kyoto Protocol. "[T]he [Department of Energy] report estimates that, in 2010: Gasoline prices would likely increase about 66 cents per gallon, from an anticipated baseline price of $1.25 without the Protocol's restrictions to $1.91 a gallon; and electricity would cost 86.4 percent more than it would otherwise." (Alexander F. Annett, "The Department Of Energy's Report On The Impact Of Kyoto," The Heritage Foundation, October 23, 1998; original data from "Impacts Of The Kyoto Protocol On U.S. Energy Markets And Economic Activity," U.S. Department Of Energy, Energy Information Administration, October 1998) (emphasis added)

Among Major Industrialized Countries, Only Romania Has Ratified The Kyoto Protocol:

ú As Of May 9, 2001, Only 34 Countries Have Ratified The Agreement. While China, India, Brazil and other nations have yet to ratify Kyoto, the agreement has been ratified by Mauritius, Lesotho, Tuvalu and the Federal States of Micronesia. (U.N. Framework Convention On Climate Change Website, www.unfccc.int, June 12, 2001)

ú China And India - Two Of The Top Global Emitters Of Greenhouse Gases- Are Exempt From The Provisions Of The Kyoto Treaty. (Bill Sammon, "Bush Hits Others For Global Warming," The Washington Times, June 12, 2001)

ú No European Union Country Has Ratified The Kyoto Agreement. "Ever since President Bush announced that the United States would not support the Kyoto Protocol, European leaders have attacked him relentlessly for this decision, even resorting to petty name-calling. Their protests are hypocritical. Notwithstanding their purported commitment to the Protocol, no EU country has ratified the treaty. Moreover, studies suggest that emissions in Europe will increase over the next 10 years." (Charli E. Coon, "Why President Bush Is Right To Abandon The Kyoto Protocol," The Heritage Foundation, Backgrounder #1437, May 11, 2001) (emphasis added)

A Brookings Institution Expert Denounces The Kyoto Protocol As Implausible:

ú Warwick McKibbin, A Senior Fellow At The Brookings Institution, Says That The Kyoto Protocol Will Never Work. ". . . [T]he mechanisms within the Protocol are too complex and require too many new institutional developments to be plausible. . . . [T]he Kyoto Protocol is never going to work because it is the wrong approach to tackling the climate change issue." (Warwick W. McKibbin, "Moving Beyond Kyoto," The Brookings Institution, October, 2000) (emphasis added)

The Flawed Kyoto Protocol:
Rejected By The Senate 95-0

"Economists from the Clinton White House now concede that complying with Kyoto's mandatory reductions in greenhouse gases would be difficult - and more expensive to American consumers than they thought when they were in charge." (Jonathan Weisman, "Ex-Clinton Aides Admit Kyoto Treaty Flawed," USA Today, June 12, 2001)

The U.S. Senate - Which Must Ratify All Treaties - Unanimously Stated Its Displeasure With The Kyoto Protocol In 1997:

ú In 1997, The U.S. Senate Expressed The Sense Of The Senate, By A 95-0 Vote, That It Would Not Ratify Any Treaty That Would Damage The U.S. Economy Or Unfairly Regulate Developed Countries. (S. Res. 98, Roll Call #205: Resolution Agreed To 95-0: R 54-0; D 41-0, July 25, 1997)

ú Democrat Senator Robert Byrd Said That The Exemption Of Developing Countries Spelled Trouble For America. "If you want to really kill this treaty, abide by the Berlin Mandate and let the developing countries off the
hook until some future time. That is what will surely kill the treaty, and I will join in stabbing it in the heart, if that is the case. If that treaty comes back here and the developing countries are left off the hook, count me in on the assassination of the treaty. It will be done in public view. It won't be behind a bush." (Senator Byrd, Congressional Record, July 25, 1997) (emphasis added)

Former Aides To President Clinton Admitted That The Kyoto Protocol Is Flawed
And That Support For The Treaty Has Stalled Over Time:

ú USA Today Reported That The Clinton Administration's Global Warming
Coordinator Now Admits China - The World's Largest Nation - Will Not Ratify The Kyoto Protocol Any Time Soon. "Todd Stern, Clinton's global warming coordinator, says that the Europeans would likely go along with an unlimited
trading system if the Bush administration would return to the negotiating table to produce a revised treaty it could sign. However, he concedes that China won't participate for now." (Jonathan Weisman, "Ex-Clinton Aides Admit Kyoto Treaty Flawed," USA Today, June 12, 2001) (emphasis added)

ú Joseph Aldy, Who Helped Develop The Kyoto Protocol Compliance Cost Estimates, Admits The Clinton Administration Was "Uneasy" About Their Position From The Beginning. "We always thought the (emissions) targets were very ambitious. . . . But the thing that made us really uneasy about our analysis . . . was that if our assumptions didn't come true, you could come out with costs that were much, much higher." (Jonathan Weisman, "Ex-Clinton Aides Admit Kyoto Treaty Flawed," USA Today, June 12, 2001) (emphasis added)

Compliance Costs Would Be Disastrous For American Consumers:

ú President Clinton's Own Department Of Energy Predicted Catastrophic
Gasoline And Electricity Price Increases If America Ratified The Kyoto Protocol. "[T]he [Department of Energy] report estimates that, in 2010: Gasoline prices would likely increase about 66 cents per gallon, from an anticipated baseline price of $1.25 without the Protocol's restrictions to $1.91 a gallon; and electricity would cost 86.4 percent more than it would otherwise." (Alexander F. Annett, "The Department Of Energy's Report On The Impact Of Kyoto," The Heritage Foundation, October 23, 1998; original data from "Impacts Of The Kyoto Protocol On U.S. Energy Markets And Economic Activity," U.S. Department Of Energy, Energy Information Administration, October 1998) (emphasis added)

Among Major Industrialized Countries, Only Romania Has Ratified The Kyoto Protocol:

ú As Of May 9, 2001, Only 34 Countries Have Ratified The Agreement. While China, India, Brazil and other nations have yet to ratify Kyoto, the agreement has been ratified by Mauritius, Lesotho, Tuvalu and the Federal States of Micronesia. (U.N. Framework Convention On Climate Change Website, www.unfccc.int, June 12, 2001)

ú China And India - Two Of The Top Global Emitters Of Greenhouse Gases- Are Exempt From The Provisions Of The Kyoto Treaty. (Bill Sammon, "Bush Hits Others For Global Warming," The Washington Times, June 12, 2001)

ú No European Union Country Has Ratified The Kyoto Agreement. "Ever since President Bush announced that the United States would not support the Kyoto Protocol, European leaders have attacked him relentlessly for this decision, even resorting to petty name-calling. Their protests are hypocritical. Notwithstanding their purported commitment to the Protocol, no EU country has ratified the treaty. Moreover, studies suggest that emissions in Europe will increase over the next 10 years." (Charli E. Coon, "Why President Bush Is Right To Abandon The Kyoto Protocol," The Heritage Foundation, Backgrounder #1437, May 11, 2001) (emphasis added)

A Brookings Institution Expert Denounces The Kyoto Protocol As Implausible:

ú Warwick McKibbin, A Senior Fellow At The Brookings Institution, Says That The Kyoto Protocol Will Never Work. ". . . [T]he mechanisms within the Protocol are too complex and require too many new institutional developments to be plausible. . . . [T]he Kyoto Protocol is never going to work because it is the wrong approach to tackling the climate change issue." (Warwick W. McKibbin, "Moving Beyond Kyoto," The Brookings Institution, October, 2000) (emphasis added)

The Flawed Kyoto Protocol:
Rejected By The Senate 95-0

"Economists from the Clinton White House now concede that complying with Kyoto's mandatory reductions in greenhouse gases would be difficult - and more expensive to American consumers than they thought when they were in charge." (Jonathan Weisman, "Ex-Clinton Aides Admit Kyoto Treaty Flawed," USA Today, June 12, 2001)

The U.S. Senate - Which Must Ratify All Treaties - Unanimously Stated Its Displeasure With The Kyoto Protocol In 1997:

ú In 1997, The U.S. Senate Expressed The Sense Of The Senate, By A 95-0 Vote, That It Would Not Ratify Any Treaty That Would Damage The U.S. Economy Or Unfairly Regulate Developed Countries. (S. Res. 98, Roll Call #205: Resolution Agreed To 95-0: R 54-0; D 41-0, July 25, 1997)

ú Democrat Senator Robert Byrd Said That The Exemption Of Developing Countries Spelled Trouble For America. "If you want to really kill this treaty, abide by the Berlin Mandate and let the developing countries off the hook until some future time. That is what will surely kill the treaty, and I will join in stabbing it in the heart, if that is the case. If that treaty comes back here and the developing countries are left off the hook, count me in on the assassination of the treaty. It will be done in public view. It won't be behind a bush." (Senator Byrd, Congressional Record, July 25, 1997) (emphasis added)

ú USA Today Reported That The Clinton Administration's Global Warming Coordinator Now Admits China - The World's Largest Nation - Will Not Ratify The Kyoto Protocol Any Time Soon. "Todd Stern, Clinton's global warming coordinator, says that the Europeans would likely go along with an unlimited trading system if the Bush administration would return to the negotiating table to produce a revised treaty it could sign. However, he concedes that China won't participate for now." (Jonathan Weisman, "Ex-Clinton Aides Admit Kyoto Treaty Flawed," USA Today, June 12, 2001) (emphasis added)

ú Joseph Aldy, Who Helped Develop The Kyoto Protocol Compliance Cost Estimates, Admits The Clinton Administration Was "Uneasy" About Their Position From The Beginning. "We always thought the (emissions) targets were very ambitious. . . . But the thing that made us really uneasy about our analysis . . . was that if our assumptions didn't come true, you could come out with costs that were much, much higher." (Jonathan Weisman, "Ex-Clinton Aides Admit Kyoto Treaty Flawed," USA Today, June 12, 2001) (emphasis added)

ú President Clinton's Own Department Of Energy Predicted Catastrophic Gasoline And Electricity Price Increases If America Ratified The Kyoto Protocol. "[T]he [Department of Energy] report estimates that, in 2010: Gasoline prices would likely increase about 66 cents per gallon, from an anticipated baseline price of $1.25 without the Protocol's restrictions to $1.91 a gallon; and electricity would cost 86.4 percent more than it would otherwise." (Alexander F. Annett, "The Department Of Energy's Report On The Impact Of Kyoto," The Heritage Foundation, October 23, 1998; original data from "Impacts Of The Kyoto Protocol On U.S. Energy Markets And Economic Activity," U.S. Department Of Energy, Energy Information Administration, October 1998) (emphasis added)

Among Major Industrialized Countries, Only Romania Has Ratified The Kyoto Protocol:

ú As Of May 9, 2001, Only 34 Countries Have Ratified The Agreement. While China, India, Brazil and other nations have yet to ratify Kyoto, the agreement has been ratified by Mauritius, Lesotho, Tuvalu and the Federal States of Micronesia. (U.N. Framework Convention On Climate Change Website, www.unfccc.int, June 12, 2001)

ú China And India - Two Of The Top Global Emitters Of Greenhouse Gases- Are Exempt From The Provisions Of The Kyoto Treaty. (Bill Sammon, "Bush Hits Others For Global Warming," The Washington Times, June 12, 2001)

ú No European Union Country Has Ratified The Kyoto Agreement. "Ever since President Bush announced that the United States would not support the Kyoto Protocol, European leaders have attacked him relentlessly for this decision, even resorting to petty name-calling. Their protests are hypocritical. Notwithstanding their purported commitment to the Protocol, no EU country has ratified the treaty. Moreover, studies suggest that emissions in Europe will increase over the next 10 years." (Charli E. Coon, "Why President Bush Is Right To Abandon The Kyoto Protocol," The Heritage Foundation, Backgrounder #1437, May 11, 2001) (emphasis added)

ú Warwick McKibbin, A Senior Fellow At The Brookings Institution, Says That The Kyoto Protocol Will Never Work. ". . . [T]he mechanisms within the Protocol are too complex and require too many new institutional developments to be plausible. . . . [T]he Kyoto Protocol is never going to work because it is the wrong approach to tackling the climate change issue." (Warwick W. McKibbin, "Moving Beyond Kyoto," The Brookings Institution, October, 2000) (emphasis added)
